REVIVAL SERVICES CLOSED

The great services of the month of April came to a close on Sunday night. The congregations at all services broke all records for attendance and enthusiasm. It is significant, of much, that on a Sunday afternoon the church should be packed full to hear a lecture on "Anarchy" and no voice was heard in protest. It is more and more recognized that no human interest is foreign to the Christian or unconnected with hindering or helping establish the Kingdom of God.

In all about 19,000 sittings were occupied from beginning to end. The church has been strengthened in every department and where there has been reluctance there is now eagerness. People from Tamworth, Consecon, Belleville and many other places have been in attendance.

The calibre of such leadership as Hinley and Fisher showed, determines the standing in the community of the services.

Let unfortunate types of evangelism and evangelists become obsolete. For evangelistic services which "stir the emotions to such an extent as to unbalance the reason" can have only bad results. When the excitement is over and sanity returns, those who wrought upon would become sceptical of all religious effort, and the last state is worse than the first." But where all join hands to take higher ground, when the very foundation stones of right living and thinking are more firmly established in God, everyone is the better for it.

The names of the leaders will be fragrant for years to come.

So long as there are men and women and sin and salvation, song and sermon and sanctuary will hold a central place in the lives of thoughtful men.

On Friday night at 7 o'clock the officials of the church and their wives, together with the officers of the Sunday School, are giving a banquet to those who are to come into fellowship on Sunday next. Rev. Alfred Brown, pastor of Belleville, is to be the speaker.

On Sunday morning at 10 o'clock the reception service will be held and the sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be administered.

MILLHAVEN.

The Millhaven wharf is reported to be well advanced toward completion. The contractor has only to finish the top and it will be ready for service. The residents of Amherst Island and the mainland are delighted to have this wharf which has been a long-felt necessity, especially for the residents of the island, who desire the shortest route to Ernestown station. John McIntyre's service is expected to increase and if the passenger traffic warrants it he may put on a larger boat. The people are particularly grateful to Mr. Sexsmith, M.P., for this wharf.

Many of the farmers on the island are sending their entire output of cream to Kingston daily by the Bath stage, which picks up passengers and freight at Millhaven.

A BUSY PLACE

Seeing the bustle around Wilmot & Chapman, Ford Dealers, establishment, we paid a visit to find the reason.

"Well, how are business prospects in the Ford line for 1923?" we enquired, never looked so bright—soon have half our allotment sold."

"Isn't that unusual, considering industrial conditions here—how do you account for it?"

"No, it is only what we expected, when people realized the days of easy money were over and everyone got hunting for best value for their dollars, when a man forgets the bunk coming in with the Jones' idea and insists on buying transportation that is a utility motor car, that will transport him cheaply, in both business and pleasure quests, and insists on getting real value—he has to buy a Ford."

"WHO ARE YOUR PURCHASERS—WHAT CLASS OF CITIZENS?"

"Mainly the solid families who were not carried away with the spending madness that has been with us for the last few years; while others spent lavishly, they saved and denied themselves a motor car because prices were exorbitant—now they have the cash and can buy a Ford car when it is the cheapest in history. Then, we are selling the rich man who has found he must save his large car—the proper depreciation is being taken off by all dealers; now that prices have stopped advancing his losses would be great, so he must save his large investment, and he buys a Ford which he trades each year. Of course, the vast majority of Commercial firms, Travellers, Doctors and other professional men always bought Fords because they must use a car in all weathers and road conditions and they dare not experiment with cars—their living depends on sure transportation so, naturally, they would buy Fords. Then, the ladies have found that a Ford car is most easily driven, no gear shifting, and are buying Ford Sedans and Coupes, as the ideal family car for this climate."

"The Ford Ton Truck and Speed Truck, with their wide range of bodies have no equal for the money, and as modern business demands speedy, cheap delivery, we find business man is a customer for this line. Coupling all this with consistent hard sales, effort, backed with our reputation for giving value in used cars and honest service behind new cars, we are piling up great sales."

"ARE ALL THE NEW LIGHT CARS IN THE FIELD NOT AFFECTING YOU?"

"To a little, of course, people are well versed in motors by this time and very few are willing to experiment with their money. Probably in a few years that opposition will make itself felt, but by that time Ford's tremendous production will have the price down very low—they have such a start and such a complete organization."

I noticed you lay particular stress on Ford service in your advertising. ON WHAT DO YOU BASE YOUR ASSERTION THAT YOUR SERVICE IS SUPERIOR TO OTHERS?"

"Service is much abused word. The public have an idea that it is getting something for nothing. It is not. I will endeavor to show you why no Car Dealer can give the service on his car that we give with Fords. In the first place, Ford is a standard car—no changes have ever been made in basic construction—true, Fords have been refined, strengthened, and new bodies, tops, wheels, and steering gears added—but each improvement has been made interchangeable with the old. Now, for ten thousand dollars we can carry a complete stock of genuine Ford parts, and naturally they are cheap—due to standardization, whereas other manufacturers have changed and changed until these parts have advanced to exorbitant prices and the car is relegated to the scrap days—until they come from factoryThen we can, and have installed Ford labor-saving machinery and trained men on certain work, until we can get a schedule price for each operation, thereby taking all guesswork out of repairing. You will note that our whole Garage, our Accessory stock, our Ford parts, from the smallest screw to a complete frame, in our Repair Department, is all laid out to serve Ford owners only. That is Ford service. If you take a visit all our competitors, you will find that our service contention is absolutely correct—none can offer a price chaser such inducements."

"WHY DO YOU DEAL IN OTHER CARS THAN FORDS?"

"For the very good reason that a used large car is not saleable—there is a big profit produced when that product is at a lower price. It is natural that a car purchaser would prefer a new Ford to a used Navy League—that is why used cars of any other makes have to be depreciated to such an extent, in order to make a sale."

"ARE CLOSED CAR SALES INCREASING OVER OPEN MODELS?"

"Very rapidly, when one can purchase that sturdy Ford Sedan or Coupe for $791 and $888, delivered to him at Napanee, is it any wonder people prefer closed car luxury and comfort? When our upgrade climate is also considered; the long Falls, when winds are cold, but the roads at their best, the closed car is comfortable and its use lengthens the motoring season. Closed cars are Ford's cheapest product with their new upholstery and many improvements.

"We are also showing the best used cars for the money, in the district."

Of the Bay of Quinte Held Sessions at Napanee.

The Bay of Quinte Clerical Union met in Napanee on Tuesday and Wednesday, April 24th and 25th, the Bishop of Ontario and twenty-two clergy being present. The Rev. H. Pringle, Adolphustown, gave a scholarly and oppressive outline of Christian doctrine and practise. Bishop Bidwell contributed a lucid and intensely interesting analysis of Gore's book, "Belief in God." At the public service in St. Mary Magdalene's church, which was largely attended, the preacher was Canon Broughall, St. Catherines, who made a strong plea for loyalty to the Christian faith. Canon Broughall also gave a helpful devotional address to the clergy at the concluding session. Rev. Canon Armstrong and Rev. Rural Dean Coleman were re-elected respectively president and secretary of the Union.

APPRECIATION OF COMMEMORATION OF ZEEBRUGGE DAY

The following letter has been received by Mrs. A. L. Harshaw, Regent, United Empire Loyalist Chapter, I.O.D.E.: "Hillcrest," Napanee, Ontario:

Toronto, April 20th, 1923.

My Dear Mrs. Harshaw,—

Many thanks for your excessively kind letter of the 19th inst., and, needless to say, I am glad beyond words that your Chapter has arranged for Commemoration Services to be held in Napanee on Sunday next.

In these days, owing to the strain and stress—one is likely to forget, not willingly I grant you, but nevertheless, to forget those who died that we might live. Therefore, the Navy League of Canada seeks to at least bring to the attention of all people once a year our gallant dead.

I remember well my last visit to Napanee, and the dark hours that confronted Canada at that time, as we worked together then for Victory, so let us all work together now, that this country may become the Free Land, serving God in truth and righteousness. If we do this our men will not have died in vain.

I shall be happy at any time, if you will give me reasonable notice, to come to Napanee again and speak for your Chapter. I do not think people of Canada realize how importana the sailor is to their welfare, not merely for defense, but prosperity.

With kindest regards,

Faithfully yours,

(Lieut-Col.) Cecil G. Williams,
Provincial Manager,

Hidden Writing.

Most "crooks" use invisible ink as a means of baffling the police. There are certain liquids which, when used for writing on paper, yield characters that are invisible when dry, but are immediately revealed by the application of heat or some known chemical solution.

A harmless-looking piece of blank paper found on the premises of a criminal may reveal great secrets when tested, and may ultimately lead to the discovery of the malefactor.

By far the simplest developer of hidden writing is heat. Letters or messages written in well-diluted oil of vitriol or lemon-juice are invisible when dry, but if held in front of the fire the markings become quite plain and legible.

An old trick in society circles is for pieces of pink paper to be passed from one cardsharper to another. These bits of paper contain the plans of the unsuspected, gentlemanly crook, who lives entirely by fraud at cards. The message is written with a solution of chloride of cobalt, which on pink paper is not able to be seen, but if subjected to heat the lettering becomes blue, and will fade again on contact with cold air.

A most ingenuious way of writing invisibly used by some criminals and likely to baffle most people is done with a solution made from sulphate of copper. It is readable only when held in fumes of ammonia.

The use of invisible ink since the war has become very prevalent in many of the larger cities infested with high-class crooks, who make a handsome living out of the innocence of the new-rich by gaining their complete confidence and then robbing them at cards and other games.

Hero of France.

It is well to remember in these days that Pasteur, not Napoleon, is the popular hero of France. Thousands of sermons have been preached upon the votes of French school children that Louis Pasteur was the greatest Frenchman. Those votes were indeed a record of the essential healthy-mindedness of the French people, and especially of the French peasants, for the rural districts used to roll up the greatest vote for the scientist. But the sermon makers, in America at least, might be shocked if they were to ask French school children why Pasteur was great. For they would discover that while we on this side of the ocean are celebrating his centenary as the founder of preventive medicine, French peasant children know Pasteur as the man who saved the wine industry of France by discovering the harmless method of stopping bacterial fermentation known as pasteurization.—The Nation.

CHILDREN OF UNMARRIED PARENTS

Dr. J. G. Shearer.

Some 5000 innocent children are born out of marriage each year in Canada. There are therefore about 25,000 such little ones under five years of age and, allowing for those who die at twice the rate for other children, 60,000 under sixteen at any one time in the Dominion.

This host of children has heretofore been treated socially with shameful injustice and cruelty, even where they get affectionate mothering which was not universal, they have been branded on the official registers as "illegitimate" a term that may well be applied to their parents but surely not to the innocent children.

Some three years ago the Social Service Council undertook a study of their case and of the laws in Canadian Provinces, and in other countries dealing with this problem. Norway was found to have the best law in the world at that time.

The Norwegian law was materially improved upon and a model law for the care of children born out of wedlock drafted. This was submitted to the Attorney General of Ontario, put into legal form, introduced in the Legislature of that Province and enacted with few changes. A year later it was in substance adopted by the Legislature of Manitoba. Within the last few months it has been adopted also by British Columbia and Alberta. As these four Provinces contain five-sixths of the population of Canada, a similar proportion of the children concerned are thus protected and cared for. And there is every reason to expect that before many years pass this beneficient measure will be the law throughout Canada.

It aims to serve three ends. First to ensure to these children economic support, a public school education and as nearly as possible a fair chance in life,—as fair a chance as they would have had if born of the same parents in wedlock. Second, to secure justice to the mothers. They are not entitled to more than justice, but they are entitled to justice. Heretofore they have born singly all the shame and all the burden resulting from the fault of both the fathers and themselves. Third, to see that the fathers get justice also. Being unprincipalled usually in degree at least, they have generally proven themselves cowards or cads and gone scot free because of the serious imperfections of previously existing laws regarding illegitimacy. Justice to the fathers entails responsibility at least for the full financial support of their children, and the payment of the maternity expenses of the mothers or other costs necessarily resulting from their misconduct. Paternity of course must be given where not admitted to the satisfaction of a judge in Chambers. Needless publicity is avoided. The mother's evidence must be corroborated in some respect. The Judge with all the facts and evidence before him decides the question of paternity. That being settled he determines also what the father must pay. When this is fixed he must pay the sum weekly or monthly until his child become sixteen years of age and thus ceases to be a child. No paltry $100.00 or so will set him permanently free from the consequences of his conduct. Five dollars per week means $3,900.00 in fifteen years.

This feature of the law, which has been in force in Norway for about eighty years, has resulted in a steady decline in the number of births out of marriage in that country. There is every reason to believe that when this new measure becomes generally known and understood and after a few years experience under wise administration there will be similar decrease in the number of cases of illegitimate parentage in Canada.

Pericarditis.

The first symptoms of pericarditis —an inflamation of the sac that covers the heart, and that therefore is named the pericardium—are so little definite that the disease is often overlooked, especially when it accompanies or follows rheumatism or some disease of the chest. Pain over the heart is common, but it may be absent; fever, if present, is usually moderate. If there is much fluid in the pericardium, or if the fibrinous matter glues together the inner surfaces of the sac, the patient is sometimes short of breath and has a bounding and rapid pulse. A person who suffers with pericarditis should be kept in bed as he so spare the heart all unnecessary labor. He should eat moderately of digestible food—milk chiefly, if he digests it well—and not be tempted to indulge of the heart with a distended stomach. If he feels pain he will be best relieved by having an ice bag over his heart; sometimes, however, especially if the patient is a child, he will receive more benefit from hot applications than from cold. A small blister sometimes gives relief to the sufferer, but it often leaves a sore place that is troublesome. When the accumulation of fluid in the sac is extreme the surgeon may find it necessary to puncture the pericardium with a hollow needle, and draw the liquid off.

Newsprint and Pulpwood.

It takes 40 years to grow pulpwood spruce, and American newspapers are using 5,000,000 cords of wood a year. The American Forestry Association suggests a plan by which 30,000 square miles of cut-over lands, now unproductive, might be planted to 40 successive crops of timber; this would mean a perpetual supply of newsprint. With sound national forestry laws, the co-operation of the states, and active participation by the pulp and paper interests, it is said that America's staggering fire loss would be held within reasonable limits, and the needful supply assured.

Want Prohibition.

Largely as a result of persistent agitation on the part of the women of Japan the Parliament of that country has passed a law prohibiting the sale of intoxicants to persons under twenty-one years of age.

REGULATION OF VARIETY NAMES FOR SEEDS AND PLANTS.

A new phase in relation to seed control is being provided in a Bill before Parliament at Ottawa. This measure, which constitutes an amendment to the Seed Control Act, prohibits the offering for sale of farm seeds that have been given a false or spurious name. Neither will the seller be allowed to offer seeds or plants under a new variety name not generally employed in Canada for that particular variety unless he first obtains a license therefor from the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister may refuse to issue a license in respect of the use of any kind or variety name unless or until the seeds or plants have been examined and reported upon. A license will not be granted for the selling of an old variety under a new name. In explanation of this amendment it may be cited that a farmer or dealer might unintentionally sell seed oats under the name of "Banner" and deliver seed oats that were not true to that variety. A complaint might be laid against him under another section of the Act, but this section under review is not intended to apply to such an offense since the variety named "Banner" as applied to oats cannot be held to be false or spurious or new. The provision is intended to apply to persons who invent new names for old standard varieties. It is regarded as likely that this new regulation will give encouragement to plant breeders by affording them more protection with respect to such new sorts as they may originate.

STORIES OF MOTHER GOOSE.

Some of These Popular Tales Founded on Fact.

Have you ever thought how we first got those wonderful stories that are shown on the stage — "Mother Goose," "Humpty Dumpty," "Jack Horner," and all the rest of them?

Many of them are entirely faithful, but others are supposed to be based on things that really happened, and tradition in many cases points out the spots where these legends took place.

A number of you will have seen the stone on Highgate Hill, marking the spot where Dick Whittington sat and heard the bells of London town sing "Turn again, Whittington, thrice Mayor of London Town." But the curious thing is that the Sir Richard Whittington who is supposed to have been the original "Dick" was four times Lord Mayor, and, as far as is known, never had a cat.

Some of you will perhaps have visited Kirkiees Hall, near Doncaster, where that famous hero of pantomime, Robin Hood, is said to have been bled to death by a faithless nun, and near by you will, perhaps, have seen the grave where, according to tradition, the famous outlaw is buried.

The exact spot was, of course, chosen by an arrow shot from the nearby Hall when Robin realised that he was dying. There are people, however, who scoff, and say an arrow could not possibly have been shot so great a distance, but, nevertheless, the matter has been never properly settled either way. As an epitaph formerly on the grave said:

"Here underneath this little stone
Lies Robert, Earl of Huntington,
No archer was as he so good,
And people called him Robin Hood."

Another famous pantomime hero is Robinson Crusoe, and perhaps his tale is as closely founded on fact as any of the Christmas stage stories.

Alexander Selkirk was the original Alexander Selkirk, and it was whilst serving as a sailing master that he committed some breach of the ship's regulations, for which the captain put him ashore on the island of Juan Fernandes, off the Chilean coast, and left him to his fate. There he remained five years, until he was rescued by a Captain Rogers and brought back to England.

"Mother Goose" is another pantomime with a good deal of truth behind it. There once lived in Canada a widow who had six children. In time she married Isaac Goose, a man with ten children. With so many children she, of course, "didn't know what to do," hence the rhyme and the well-known pantomime.

"Jack Horner" is reputed to have lived in the reign of Henry VIII. At that time a certain abbot wished to send the title deeds of some property to the King.

As in those days, however, the roads were infested with robbers, the deeds were hidden in a pie, which was entrusted to John Horner. But, despite this care, the deeds never reached the King, for, as you know, Jack Horner:

"Put in a thumb
And pulled out a plum (the title deed),
And said, 'What a brave boy am I.'"

In support of this story it is interesting to know that the estate to which the stolen title deeds were said to refer is still owned by a family called Horner. Unfortunately, however, they say that their estate was bought from Henry VIII., and that there never was such a pie as described in the story. So what are we to believe?

Are You Insured?

Every year thousands of people have accidents of one sort or another, and in nearly every case the accident could have been avoided. Yet we go on having them just the same, and it is the insurance companies have to stump on.

The medical profession has at last roused itself to see whether it can throw any light on the subject, and it has just issued a list of contributory causes which are well worth studying. They are:—

(1) Fatigue.
(2) Speed of production.
(3) Age and experience.
(4) Youthful bravado.
(5) Alcohol.
(6) Lighting and temperature.

Alcohol varies in its effect, according to whether it is taken when one is more liable to accidents at first, but less liable after the alcohol has reawakened activity.

Psychical influences are mentioned as a seventh cause.

Telegraph to Lhasa.

The "Forbidden City" is now linked to the outer world by the telegraph, which is all the more remarkable when it is remembered that visitors up to a few years ago rarely escaped with their lives.

Here and There

An addition to the Canadian Pacific Montreal-Toronto train service is a nightly train each way, making six trains every night between the two cities. The increase was found necessary on account of the heavy tourist traffic to Montreal from the West.

The opinion of Hon. T. D. Pattullo, Minister of Lands of British Columbia, is that "Canada can absorb at least 300,000 people annually, and this number can come on indefinitely. There is no limit to the requirements of the country. As many as we can get are wanted.

Nova Scotia is endeavoring to arrange an "old home" month during July or August of 1923, and it is expected that many from distant parts of Canada and the United States will visit the towns of their origin during the festival period set apart.

Incomparable Lake Louise has achieved new fame. The makers of the Gray-Dort car have put out a model in a new color which they term "Lake Louise Blue." It is of a lovely green-blue, and if it has caught anything of the glorious gleam of Canada's most beautiful mountain lake it should be a popular color for other than motor cars.

Big Bill, the last surviving buffalo at the Pinafore Park Zoo, St. Thomas, was recently shot. The animal had been suffering for some time from the same malady which carried off his mate a few months ago. Big Bill was said to have been the finest specimen of Buffalo east of the Government Park at Wainwright, Saskatchewan.

Albert Steedwell, Canadian Pacific Railway engineer at Fort William, has an airedale dog that is a wolf killer. Mr. Steedwell has a farm at Upsala, and while visiting the farm the dog routed out a brush wolf and chased it. During the subsequent battle one could hardly tell which was dog and which a wolf. Mr. Steedwell went to the assistance of his pet and together they finished the wolf.

T. W. McKenzie, Canadian Pacific Railway agent at Rosemary, Alberta, has received letters patent on a device for the purpose of locking automobiles. It is so constructed that when the switch is thrown off the car is automatically locked, thereby eliminating the possible chance of an owner leaving his car unprotected. The engine cannot be operated nor the car started by an unauthorized person without causing an alarm.

The number of persons killed or injured while trespassing on railroad tracks were 50 per cent. less in 1922 than the average for the preceding fifteen years. The figures are 5,300 for nine months of 1922 compared with 10,736, the average for the previous years, according to an announcement made by the Safety Section of the American Railroad Association. The reduction in casualties is claimed to be due to the improved policing by the roads and to success of the Safety First movement.

From September 1 to March 31 inclusive, the Canadian Pacific Railway has transported to Vancouver 7,884 cars of grain, representing 11,668,328 bushels. Last year during the same period the movement amounted to 2,802 cars or 3,967,632 bushels. From the beginning of the crop season 13,571,320 bushels had been exported from Vancouver, of which 11,128,620 went to the United Kingdom, 2,242,300 to the Orient and 200,400 to South America. Last year during the same period export amounted to 5,000,000 bushels.

SOURCE OF QUININE.

First Used as Defence Against Fever in Tropics.

Those who have been heavy users of quinine during the recent flu epidemic may be interested in the origin and treatment of this drug, which, while most useful in the cure of colds and grippe, has its chief value as a protection against fever in the tropics.

It was in 1862 that Sir Clements R. Markham introduced the Peruvian barks of South America into India. After attempts at culture in various parts of India, Burma and Ceylon, it was tried out at Darjeeling, on the Himalaya Mountains. A point 9,000 feet above sea level being found too severe in the season of frost and cold winds, a more sheltered spot was chosen lower down, and the plants took root. But the tea-planters had arrived first, so another move was made to the basin of the Teesta river.

Here the cinchona barks found an ideal atmosphere for their development, and the slopes of the mountains, once primeval forest, are now covered to a height of between 3,000 and 4,000 feet with flourishing cinchona trees. A European manager and European superintendents supervise the work of the coolies, with the aid of native foremen. The seedlings are planted, supported with a bamboo stake, in pits 15 inches deep and 18 inches wide, after which the soil is replaced.

The cold, dry season lasts from November to March. During these months shed-collecting is carried out. Just as the seed vessels are beginning spontaneously to burst they are carefully gathered and placed in shallow boxes to dry. The harvesting of the bark crop takes place in the cold, dry weather succeeding the rains. The barking, as it is called, is done by a special gang of coolies, to whom the felled branches and stems are made over as soon as they are cut. With a gardener's knife the coolie makes longitudinal and transverse incisions on a stem, then inserts his knife at the end and presses it upward until the strip is free and can be peeled off.

As soon as the bark is separated from the wood it is conveyed in baskets carried on the coolies' backs to the drying sheds. It is spread out on shelves in the open air to dry, coolies turning it regularly. When it is thoroughly dry the bark will keep without deterioration for a lengthy period. It is stored in godowns until it is sent on miles to the factory, where the process of manufacturing the quinine is carried out.

DELL HENDERSON'S ART.

Music Contests in Festival

Whenever a series of more than two concerts is arranged in Toronto the citizens of that city describe it as a festival, and for that reason some persons may be critical of the assertion that the city is to have its first musical festival during the week beginning April 30th next. The fact remains, however, that the Ontario Musical Competition Festival is something entirely new in the history of the province. In the future we shall probably look back to the first week in May, 1923, as an event that possesses the same importance in the cultural life of this part of the Dominion as the building of art galleries and the establishment of community theaters. The surprising thing is that Toronto, which contains more musicians of distinction than any other half dozen cities in Canada put together, should have delayed so long in the organization of a competition festival. The English festivals have long been world-famous, and were models waiting to be followed. In the Western Canadian Provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba similar festivals are annual events.

Music is one of the few arts that can be conducted by competition. It is proverbial that the offering of prizes for plays and stories does more harm than good, but contests have frequently produced results gratifying results among musicians, even composers, but especially interpreters. Was not "Cavalieria Rusticana" the product of a competition? In Toronto, the singing contests in the schools have done a great deal to advance the interests in music in our community. It is easy to see how the preparation of the best compositions by hundreds of amateurs who are taking part in the contests will help raise the level of taste in music, and counteract in part the distressing influences of jazz. There is no indication in mentioning the figures of contestants in the hundreds. In the last Birmingham Festival in England more than twelve thousand entered and took part in the contests, and in Winnipeg a year ago there were six thousand. Judged proportionately, the showing in Toronto and Ontario is highly gratifying to our national pride.

Although late in starting, Toronto is making up for lost time in organizing the Ontario competition festival on a large scale. There are to be 109 contests, which will include nearly all forms of musical offerings to vocal solos by school boys and girls. Choirs of every description figure in the list, as well as quartets, both male and mixed. Even the composers are to be given an opportunity, and composers are not plentiful in Canada. The prizes will be medals. In England in recent years they have been eliminating money prizes in the musical festivals. This was found to weed out picked choirs, quartettes and similar little organizations were going about from festival to festival to carry off little prizes, become well known, that was not the purpose of these undertakings. The pot hunters, as they were called, injured the cultural purpose of the musical festivals. They are now being discouraged in the Old World, and here they will never be permitted to get started. It must not be thought that the British festivals have disappointed their promoters. Mr. H. A. Fricker, conductor of the Mendelssohn Choir, has stated that the finest choral singers to be heard in England is done at the Blackpool and Birmingham festivals.

The two chief adjudicators, who will make the final awards after a competent staff has ob-[illegible] are to be Granville Bantock, M.A., and Harry [illegible] Greene, both of them eminent British musicians. No living English composer with the possible exception of Sir Edward Elgar, is as well known to Canadians as Granville Bantock. It is true that his original compositions are not familiar, but his arrangements of folk songs and other old melodies are used by choral societies everywhere. Harry Plunket Greene is made British popular as a vocalist. At one time he sang in opera at Covent Garden, but his fame came to him when he began to appear in oratorio and recitals, and for many years his services were much in demand in both England and America. Mr. Greene's experience is due not only to his voice but also to his splendid musicianship. The fact that two men of the standing of Granville Bantock and Harry Plunket Greene are being brought from England as adjudicators furnishes significant proof that the men behind the Ontario Musical Competition Festival are determined that it will be second to none among these undertakings.

Light Affects Plants.

Recent experiments show that the amount of light that a plant has affects its growth fully as much as the climate. The iris, for example, which ordinarily blooms in May or June, would not bloom under hothouse conditions in winter until its period of daily light was artificially lengthened by six hours. The October chrysanthemum was made to bloom in midsummer by shortening the daily light period; lettuce by the same means was held in the rosette stage for a long time; and the radish, with only seven hours of light, grew for more than a year before it finally shot up its flower stem and died.

Queen Victoria Venerated During Last Years of Reign

Anecdotes of That Period

The present generation finds it difficult sometimes to realise the immense veneration in which Queen Victoria was held. She had become a sort of legend, and that her reign should ever come to an end seemed almost fantastic.

The Jubilee of 1887 was a time of excitement and glory, and its circumstances have been told again and again, but, as Dame Dowager Countess of Jersey points out in her recent book of reminiscences, "Fifty-one years of Victorian Life," no one who did not live through it can grasp the thrill that ran from end to end of the nation.

One incident she relates tells of 10,000 children from the elementary schools being entertained in Hyde Park. The festivities ended by the release of a balloon bearing the words "Victoria." As it ascended one child was heard gravely explaining to another that "that was the Queen going up to Heaven!" No one else at the same time wrote to a newspaper (and, what is more, his letter was printed), stating that the balloon had been seen by him to burst, and that he had observed the sunset colors forming themselves into a distinct arrangement of red, white, and blue.

Ever the same throughout the Empire, and in some half-civilized places the old Queen became almost a mythical person. Lady Jersey, indeed, told on one of her many travels that the Tibetans had adopted her Majesty as a protector, and ascribed the invasion of their country to the fact that she had died, as the British had never disturbed them in her lifetime. In distant place she records how the natives of Madras paid reverence to her statue, offering cocoanuts and other tributes by way of votive offering.

In 1890 Lord Jersey was appointed Governor of New South Wales.

"Then we were to Australia," says Lady Jersey, "Lord Hopetoun was already there as Governor of Victoria, and Lord Jersey as Governor of South Australia, while Lord Onslow reigned in New Zealand. These, like Jersey, had all previously been Lords-in-Waiting to the Queen, and her Majesty said to us, 'As soon as I get a nice Lord-in-waiting for Salisbury sends him off to govern a colony' (by which my husband implied, 'You see, ma'am, how well you brought us up!' A remark rewarded by a gracious smile."

There are also numerous interesting anecdotes in "The Letters of Lord and Lady Wolseley, 1870-1911," of Queen Victoria. Lord Wolseley was what the great of our mid-Victorian soldiers, imagined (why it is not quite clear) that she was antagonistic to him, but the misunderstanding soon removed by the friendship which grew up between her and Lady Wolseley. There is a most entertaining account of the latter of a stay at Windsor in 1885—

"You know the dinners are not boisterous! This was awfully whispering, and when the Queen left the room I should have liked to give one good screech, tuck up my petticoats, and rush round the room. Princess Beatrice talked a little to me, and smiled, and was quite nice, and whispered to the servant, 'I will take a little roast chicken.' I have been accused of murder to him. After dinner the Queen talked to me most of the evening—very kindly, and simply, and intelligently, knowing more about Egypt and every other than all of us put together."

But the old Queen was impressive.

"Her 'allure' is really remarkable. She swims and floats, and is never awkward. She really runs as if on castors. She and Mr. Gladstone (government under Gladstone), 'I have been obliged to be very rude to them all, they are so dilatory and tiresome.' I have showed her Lady Jersey's article talked a little to me, and smiled, and was quite nice, and whispered to the servant, 'I will take a little roast chicken.' I have been accused of confiding a murder to him. After dinner the Queen talked to me most of the evening—very kindly, and simply, and intelligently, knowing more about Egypt and every other than all of us put together."

But the old Queen was impressive.

"Her 'allure' is really remarkable. She swims and floats, and is never awkward. She really runs as if on castors. She and Mr. Gladstone (government under Gladstone), 'I have been obliged to be very rude to them all, they are so dilatory and tiresome.' I have showed her Lady Jersey's article given for the cause of freedom, Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux served as an ideal ambassador to the negotiations necessary for the transfer to the care of the French people of the crest of Vimy. The many kind references to his services in that respect were gladly seized upon by the people of Canada. It was as a reporter on a newspaper in his native province that the present Speaker of the House began his climb to a position of friendly rivalry that recently at Ottawa, Mr. Lemieux indulged in reminiscences of his journalistic career, recalling the rivalry that marked rival writing papers, in particular, of that time.

"It was not so much which could 'pull a scoop' on the other," he remarked, with a smile, "as which could give its readers, per day, the larger measure of a certain serial story, that was very popular. To-day the one would have a column; to-morrow the other would run a little better. This it went on for some time until, finally, I—— made a march on its competitor. It printed all that remained of the serial, running into several chapters." This was what is known in journal of the Lower Province given such a start that it has maintained to this day a pre-eminent position, no longer hard-pressed it be said—upon its daily modicum of popular "serial."

Too Honest.

A lawyer engaged a new boy and, as he had suffered from the depredations of his former lad, he determined to try the new boy's honesty at once. He therefore placed a five-dollar bill under a weight on his desk, and left the office. Upon his return half an hour later the bill was gone and half a dollar had taken its place. "Boy, when I went out I left five dollars and fifty cents here. Where, sir; but, you see, you hadn't been gone five minutes when a man came in with a bill against you for four dollars and fifty cents, and I thought change is correct." "You paid the bill?" "Yes, sir; there it is, receipted. The man said it had slipped your mind for the past four years, and so—" That boy was not retained.

Terence Couldn't.

Terence Muldoon was on his way home. At least, he was floundering along in the right direction. Suddenly he fell over, and pulled himself to his feet, to find the parish priest in front of him.

"Terence, Terence," said the priest, "sinners stand on slippery ground."

"So Oi see, yer riverence," said Terence, "but, faith, it's much more than Oi can do."

SOME FISH STORIES.

Many Curiosities Observed In the Piscatorial World.

The most interesting things about fishes, the same as about people, are often never told: life is a business with them just as it is with us.

Modern fishes are quite different from their ancestors. More properly we should say that our ideas about fishes are the things that have changed. Modern-day fishes look and think. There are fishes that actually leave the water and have been known to climb trees, but one of the funniest things is a walking fish. They have been known to get seasick just like people, especially when being transported in tanks on board a steamer.

The old-time philosophers and scientific men used to find a whole lot of dreadful fishes for sailors to encounter on the deep. There were constant miracles of fishes then. There were constantly strangled ships and crews. The ashes of the sea horse, mixed with wine, would produce coughing, hot flushes and death, and if you were lucky enough to recover, you would forever wish to be sailing the seas. These old-time philosophers did not know all the fishes that lived in the deep, and so they imagined a lot of monsters and peculiar things therein for good measure.

The modern-day miracles of fishes lie in the modern discoveries about these same fishes that the old-time philosophers found so terrifying. To-day there are just two parts of the world whose inhabitants are not quite fully known. One is the deepest jungle and the other is the deep ocean. The odds belong to the ocean when it comes to cataloging unknown things, because there is such a variety of minute as well as larger forms of life. There have been explorations of ocean depths, but, of course, one can scarcely walk about there at leisure and examine everything that comes into view. Knowledge of fishes has always been more full than that concerning terrestrial animals because the latter are more available.

It now seems certain, according to the latest scientific information, that fishes do occasionally take a snooze, even if they cannot close their eyes. Recently the fishes in an aquarium were examined late one night with the light turned low. The fishes had assumed unusual positions, and when the light was suddenly turned up they became livelier. Many fishes in an aquarium are to be seen leaning against a wall or a rock.

Fishes have developed a mild power, for every fisherman knows how difficult it is to catch a fish which has once been hooked and then has got away. Sometimes fishes will even come tame in the aquarium and from time to time their actions resemble play. Scientists now believe that they have mentality, but probably not enough to be able to associate different ideas.

In another important respect fishes are quite like the great human family. There are any number of species that are quite talkative. It will be surprising to most persons that fishes can make sounds. A number of them are very noisy. For instance, the fish of the Haemulon family, called grunts, grunt. The drum fish, the sea pig, the so-called Sally Growlers by fishermen, growl like puppies over a bone, while the puffers when [illegible] in the hand produce sounds like the grinding of teeth.

Perhaps the most wonderful sort of fishes are those which can leave the water and even climb trees. The climbing perch is such a fish; it is capable of making good progress on land, and on special occasions can ascend the trunk of trees a distance of several feet. The fish has learned to use its pectoral fins to keep it from keeling over to one side and its ventral fins and the spines on the gill covers to pull itself along. The flying fishes of the South Seas, by the way, have large enough pectoral fins to enable them on flights up to a quarter of a mile.

Many fishes can at will change color. A grouper can change from gray to any of pale coloration and show few markings. Then he may suddenly settle to the bottom of the tank and reveal a number of dark bands across his body. A red coney may turn pale, the lower half of its body becoming almost white. Tropical fish, especially, have this power of color change, or, and during the mating season assume daring colorations. Scientists have found that these color changes are brought about by the contraction and expansion of color cells, which lie in deep layers of skin. The intelligence of fishes is due to their being trained. But possibly the biggest miracle of all is that performed by the starfish. While most fishes have power to regenerate their lost parts, if are not entirely torn off, this fish can regenerate its arms if they are torn off. Half of a starfish may be decapitated and the other half will grow again. In fact, cases have been recorded where an entirely new starfish grew from only the central group of cells.

Rubber Better Than Tar.

Rubber surfacing for roads, with which tests are being made in Ceylon, is claimed by its users will prove to be cheaper than tar. The cost is somewhat greater. A solution of pure bark and scrap rubber is applied by the usual method of tarring, then sand spread over the roads with brooms. After gravel has been well sprinkled over the coating a steam roller is passed over it.

Wool-work for Men.

Business men who find their nerves jaded need not hurry to the coast in search of renewed health and strength. They should take up wool-work.

Mr. Henry Hoare, a partner in the well-known English banking firm, is a notable convert. He has been a confirmed worker for three years, and an example of his work is now on exhibition at Burlington House.

"Wool-work is the best possible relaxation for a business man," Mr. Hoare told the writer. "The artistic possibilities in the work interest me immensely. I have now executed several panels and screens.

"Most of my work is done in tapestry stitch with Jacobean designs, though I am engaged in making a set of chair covers for the chairs in my dining-room."

Keeping In the Limelight.

"Actors and actresses must be a delicate lot of people," [illegible] often see their names attached to patent medicine advertisements."

TRAITOR NOW DEFIANT

CONDEMNED BY COURT ERNEST JUDET WILL FIGHT.

Famous French Journalist Promises Some Sensational Disclosures In the Near Future—He Has Always Been an Anglophobe and Believes That France Should Arrange Understanding With Germany.

There is a prospect that France is about to have a political trial whose reverberations will be heard round the world, for Ernest Judet has returned from Switzerland to face a trial for treason. His return has been voluntary, and this, added to the fact that for many years he was one of the best informed and most implacable newspaper editors in the country, with a particular passion for preserving every little document and letter that ever came into his hands, is taken as an indication that he ass less to fear from the outcome than some of his enemies, among whom Clemenceau is the chief. Judet was one of the most prominent of the alleged traitors tried and condemned in France during the war. But in the meantime he has fled for Switzerland, where he was informed of the fact that he had been sentenced to life imprisonment. The sentence was not so terrific as it would appear, for M. Judet is now seventy-six years old. Nevertheless he announced his intention of returning and having a new trial. It is probable that he has little fear of another conviction.

Judet was for many years editor of the Eclair, and distinguished himself as a leader of the French School of Thought, which was in favor of an understanding with Germany rather than with Great Britain. He argued that Germany and Germany could permanently settle their old enmity they might unite and rule in world domination. Joseph Caillaux was also a prominent figure in this school. There was nothing treasonable in such utterances at the time they were made, which was in the period that Delcasse and King Edward were founding the Entente, but made when the nation was at war with Germany, naturally they were differently regarded. Judet was no doubt sincere in his anglophobia, which grew to be the main impulse of his career. At the time of the Panama scandals he accused Clemenceau of being the paid agent of the British Government, and sought to substantiate his charge by the production of letters alleged to have come from the British Embassy to Paris. Some of these were shown to be clumsy forgeries, but the circumstantial evidence did not abate the rancour of Judet, who continued to pursue him, and in one of the bitterest elections in French history, aroused by driving "the Tiger" into political exile which lasted for years.

It was in the Great War, when Clemenceau came again to power, his immediate task was to restore the morale of the French people, which had been undermined by German propaganda through the Parisian press. At this time there were dozens of Socialist dailies being published, and scores of political pamphlets. None of them could live on its sales or advertising receipts. They were the personal organs of private proprietors, who lived by the camouflaged Germans, or mere blackmailing sheets. Many of them were defeatist. They eluded the censorship by the use, on special occasions, of kept urging that the war should be ended. They gave publicity to the fact that there had been mutinous disorders among more than one hundred French regiments in the field, these disorders, in their turn, having been largely due to the tone of the papers. Indeed, the terms to be little doubt that when Clemenceau became Premier, France was nearly on the verge of collapse, and a revolution threatened. But the people almost equally divided as to whether the war should be fought to a finish or compromised. At the head of the latter was Joseph Caillaux, who had been brought what it had already done. Sentiment in the country was favorable to Germany and hostile to Great Britain. He regarded the Entente as a mistake, and said so in a hundred forceful articles long before the war. He believed that France and Germany should be friends, and was long on record to this effect. It is not beyond reasonable that German interests helped support a paper which was doing so much work for them. He has intimated that other papers will be brought into the case, but hints that the overtures were made on behalf of members of Clemenceau's Government. To prove that he has evidence, he has announced that he will summon two hundred witnesses, among them being Clemenceau and others who held high positions during the War, whom he will endeavor to put on trial instead of himself.

Rays That Make Teeth Glow.

Remarkable new uses are being found for the ultra-violet rays which have already been employed for ripening fruit, increasing plant growth, and for sterilizing milk and drinking water. The rays are invisible, but they possess the power of making certain substances glow in the dark. At a recent demonstration in London a powerful beam of ultra-violet rays was thrown in a darkened room and the audience, who had covered their faces with cloths, saw the cloth glowed with a blue fluorescent light—false teeth showed as black — and the finger nails and eyes glowed as well.

SEEKING A POET.

Who Was Author of This Familiar Patriotic Verse.

There are some poets who bury their light under a bushel—not many but some. Miss Janet Carnochan, the Niagara historian, reports a long search to find the authorship of a poem, popular some years ago, entitled "Canada," and beginning:—

"Canada, Maple land, land of great mountains,
Lake land and river land, land
'twixt the seas."

Miss Carnochan narrates her long search and the publication of numerous letters some ten years ago. [illegible] Mr. John C. Saul had inquired for the authorship in the Toronto News, and Dr. J. D. Logan wrote inquiring of Mr. Saul, searched through 350 volumes — books and booklets—and interviewed a score of gentlemen, but without result. However, he said he had found it in a little volume of patriotic verses compiled by Col. Denison in 1891, so that it was probably written between 1887 and 1891.

"I then wrote saying that I first saw it in a Methodist Sunday school book, published in London, Ont., in 1912, in which he gives the writer as his brother, and says: "Concerning the letter which Miss Carnochan has written you, I beg to say that the poem was the work of my late brother, Alfred Beverley Cox, a barrister, who died May 3rd, 1911. It was first published in The Week in 1888, I think in December. Very soon after it appeared my brother wrote to me that it had been set to music anonymously, or with initials. Now that I see there is a possibility of credit being given to the wrong person I think it only right that I should make this statement. My brother's letter to me, December, 1888, is in my possession." (Rev. J. M. Cox, London, Ont., August, 1912."

Rev. John MacDougall, Barrie, has also written giving Alfred Beverley Cox as the author.

The poem is as follows:—

CANADA.

Canada, Maple land, land of great mountains,
Lake land and river land, land 'twixt the seas;
God, grant in our hearts that are large as our heritage,
Spirits as free as its breeze.

Grant us Thy fear, that we walk in humility,
Fear that is reverent — not fear that is base;
Grant to us righteousness, wisdom, prosperity;
Peace—if unstained by disgrace.

Grant us Thy love, and the love of our country,
Grant us Thy strength, for our strength is Thy name.
Shield us from danger, from every adversity;
Shield us, O Father, from shame!

Last-born of nations, the offspring of freedom,
Heir to wide prairies, thick forests, red gold;
God grant us the wisdom to value our birthright,
Courage to guard what we hold.

Knapp's New Invention.

F. H. Knapp, "The Manor," Prescott, Ont., of "roller boat" fame, is at present working on a new invention which, he claims, will enable motor boats to be navigated by electricity to recharge themselves and thus travel a much longer distance.

About twenty-five years ago Mr. Knapp built the first boat in Canada and the United States with an announcement that he had revolutionized navigation by a new invention. Apparently he had succeeded as a device by which a boat would "roll" through the water and many experiments were carried out on Toronto Bay. The red steel boat had many a trial trip, which attracted thousands of spectators to the waterfront. Finally the scheme was dropped and lawsuits followed. The boat can be seen to this day in the east end of Toronto harbor.

Mr. Knapp's name has been fresh in the public mind for years by references to this boat.

The first experiment on the motor car was made about a short time ago, but the gears broke and the trial trip of the car had to be abandoned for the time being. Knapp claims he will make the motor car at least a greater success than his "roller boat."

The Royal Household.

The saving of $100,000 a year in the expenses of the royal household, which department of its efficiency or the limitation of any court functions, has been made possible by Queen Mary's practical housekeeping. The Queen is a most efficient housewife. Brought up in a family not too well endowed with this world's goods, she has learned the value and necessity of economy, and all kinds of wild west trick riding. After the motor car at least a greater success than his "roller boat."

Our Exports.

That large sections of the Canadian public which believes that Canada's export trade is confined mainly to bulk foodstuffs and raw materials may be surprised to read that there were exhibited at the British Industries Fair, London, England, the following lines of manufactured goods from the Dominion: Canned milk, paper, wood, fibre, carriage and sundries, boots and shoes, breakfast foods, whiskey, soap, garters, electric cells, toilet preparations, wallpaper, etc.

The tulip originated somewhere in the Persian highlands and its name was derived in the Latin from the Persian "tulba," another form of "turban."

Pays Tribute to Fred Stone

In the column which he conducts in the Sunday New York Times, Will Rogers pays a notable tribute to his friend, Fred Stone, whose recent conversion to Christianity has been reported in most of the papers on the continent. Will says he wasn't much surprised at the step Fred took. He has always been a white man, a hard worker, a home lover, generous and straight, and living a Christian-life, but, nevertheless, it was a courageous thing to do. Many would suspect him of advertising himself. Others would be inclined to ridicule him; but Stone was always a brave man, and what anybody said about him would not bother him much as long as he knew it wasn't true. Rogers says that he supposes that this step was the result of the boyhood training he received from his mother, whom he describes as the "dearest old mother you ever saw." He applied to the paper the initials "A. C." were signed, but it frequently appeared without any signature. After her letter appeared came one from Mr. C. H. Saul, London, Ont., in 1912, in which he gives the writer as his brother, and says: "Concerning the letter which Miss Carnochan has written you, I beg to say that the poem was the work of my late brother, Alfred Beverley Cox, a barrister, who died May 3rd, 1911. Preparing to do Road Construction.

McGinnis & O'Connor, who have a big road contract in the vicinity of Odessa, have a number of men employed getting the machinery in readiness for the commencement of construction to be done this season. The piece of roadway which connects up with the provincial highway at Morven, and was built by these contractors last year, is in splendid condition. The work now to be done will complete a stretch of twenty-three miles of provincial highway between Napanee and Kingston. The road builders are getting an excellent supply of stone from a quarry, located in Odessa, and this stone will be used on the Kingston end of the work, while a second quarry, near Morven, furnishes material for that part of the job.

Boothe-Hudgin.

A very pretty wedding took place at the home of John E. and Mrs. Hudgin, Selby, on the evening of Wednesday, April 11th, 1923, when their only daughter, Margaret Grace, became the bride of Vernald Edmund Boothe, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Boothe, also of Selby. The marriage vows were received by their pastor, Rev. T. B. P. Anderson. The bride, gowned in peacock blue voletie, wearing the groom's gift, a gold wrist watch, and carrying pink carnations and ferns, looked very pretty as she joined the waiting groom under the evergreen arch. Miss Evelyn Frisken played the wedding march, to whom the groom's gift was a handsome gold brooch. After the ceremony the happy couple received the congratulations of the members of the families and a few girl friends. The register being signed the company enjoyed an excellent wedding supper. In the dining room the decorative scheme was carried out in pink and white. The young couple motored to Napanee where they entrained for Detroit. The bride's going away gown was navy Tricotine, with beige brocade crepe-de-chine blouse, with large picture hat. The community joins in best wishes for the young couple, who will take up residence on his farm west of Selby.

FEAR A COLD SUMMER.

Scientists Say That Heat of Sun Has Diminished.

NEW YORK, April 30.—A Washington despatch, asserts that United States Government scientists have been "thoroughly startled" by results of examinations of the sun's world-heating capacity made by Dr. C. G. Abbot, Home Secretary of the National Academy of Sciences. According to Abbot, the heat of the sun upon the earth has lessened by from 3 to 4 per cent. during the past 15 months.

The paper says that this unusual action on the part of the sun is assumed in Washington to be responsible for the present late spring, and scientists see in the present situation a possible duplication of the disastrous summer of 1816, when frosts occurred throughout the continent during June and July, causing wholesale loss of crops and reducing food production to a minimum.

Neither Dr. Abbot nor Prof. Charles R. Marvin, Chief of the Weather Bureau, would discuss the effect of these strange solar conditions upon next winter. Dr. Abbot said he was interested in finding the facts and leaving it to the meteorologists to draw the conclusions. Prof. Marvin said that he was giving the findings careful examination.

All acknowledge the world is facing a strange and unusual situation which probably will right itself, but which may have a startling effect upon climatic conditions during the next twelve months.

Glass Eyes Caused Death.

ST. THOMAS, April 30.—The death last evening at his residence of Albert E. Powies, head lineman of the St. Thomas Hydro-electric Commission, was a particularly sad one. Mr. Powies having been ill only a few days. His death is believed to have been caused by injuries received more than four years ago at a peace demonstration in Pinafore Park.

Mr. Powies, who served in France and Belgium for nearly three years without a casualty, was in charge of the pyrotechnical display, when a flare exploded in his face, destroying the sight of his left eye. The injury had bothered him on several occasions since then, two glass eyes breaking while in use, and it is believed that cerebral meningitis was caused from this.

Mr. Powles became violently ill about four days back.

He was born in North Yarmouth, 39 years ago, and leaves a widow and two children.

ODESSA.

The W. M. S. held a birthday supper at the Methodist church on Friday night of last week. There were twelve tables, one for each month of the year; laden with the most dainty and delicious eatables, surpassing by far any of the former occasions. The attendance was very large and a handsome sum was realized. The delightful entertainment given by Kingston talent and the numerous vocal selections by Sandy McGregor were enjoyed by all.

The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Morden Vrooman held a variety shower for them in the town hall on Wednesday night of last week. The evening was spent very enjoyably with cards and dancing. The Odessa four piece orchestra furnished the music. There were many handsome and useful gifts showing the esteem in which the young couple are held. Delicious refreshments were served at midnight.

Mrs. Ashley is visiting her brother, Thomas Hughes, Harrowsmith.

Marcus Fraser spent a week with his son, Dr. Grant Fraser, Madoc.

George Watts and Isaac Watts, Odessa, and Charley Watts, Syracuse, N.Y., are brothers of the deceased.

Miss Lillie Venton, Watertown, N.Y., is the guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Venton.

Zy Babcock, Orillia, was a recent caller in the village.

WINNIPEG, April 30.—James M. Boyd, aged 18, lost his life today when he jumped into the Red River to try to save a dog which was in dimculty after being thrown in by an unknown man. Boyd's brother Alexander attempted to effect a rescue, but his feet became entangled in barbed wire lying at the edge of the river.

Fire Sweeps Brockville.

BROCKVILLE, April 30.—Two business blocks on King street, Brockville's main thoroughfare, were badly gutted by a fire which broke out Saturday afternoon and kept the firemen busy for over four hours. A strong southwest wind prevailed, and from the outset it was seen that the buildings were doomed, the firemen being rewarded for their efforts by the saving of the Metropolitan and Lafayette Blocks—on either side of the burned structure. The buildings destroyed were owned by Thomas Tompkins, Ottawa, and the Canadian Bank of Commerce.

In the Tompkins Block were the Central fruit store (A. Runino), the Singer Sewing Machine office, the Ontario Laundry, and in the rear the Brockville Steam Laundry. In the flats above were the residences of A. Runino, Miss Baker and Henry Dyer. In the bank building were the stores of the Lynch Electric Company, the Allies shoe shine parlors and G. A. Walters' boot and shoe store. Residing above these stores were Mrs. Allan Turner and Mrs. Caplon. All the occupants made their way to safety, but little or no furniture was saved.

The loss is between forty and fifty thousand dollars, with the different owners and tenants carrying more or less insurance.

Faces Charge of Arson.

WINNIPEG, April 30.—Following an investigation by officials of the Provincial Fire Commissioner's Department, Leslie A. Clubb, of the firm of W. J. Clubb and Co., tobacconists, was arrested Saturday afternoon on a warrant charging incendiarism. He is charged with setting fire to the James Scott building, Main Street and Portage Avenue, March 25, when five firms suffered losses in an early morning blaze. The Clubb Company had a store in the building.

SUFFOCATED IN CABIN.

Pumigation Caused the Death of a Young Sailor.

SARNIA, April 30.—Asphyxiated by hydrocyanic fumes from a preparation used in fumigating, Wallace F. Lavis, aged 26, son of Mr. and Mrs. P. H. Lavis, St. David street, Strathcona, was found dead on Sunday morning in a cabin of the crew's quarters on the Northern Navigation passenger steamer Hiironic, lying at the Point Edward docks.

The particular cabin in which he was found had been fumigated at 11 o'clock by O. V. Johnson of the Knox Extermination Company, Cleveland, who placed the preparation in the cabin after, according to his statement to the coroner, he had entered four times and examined the windows, his conviction that the cabin was the door and the berth, and declared his conviction that the cabin was empty at the time.

How Lavis came to enter the cabin is not understood by the officers of the boat, who declare that a warning of fumigating operations had been issued at supper time Saturday by the steward and that Lavis was warned when he came off watch at 8.30 Sunday morning by W. J. McQuaig, the first mate.

Lavis was missed from his place at the dinner table and a search revealed his body, clad in pepper bunk, with one arm and leg hanging over the side.

Lavis had been employed on the Hurontic for five seasons, and was a single man.

TAXI DRIVER SLAIN.

Murderer Showed No Concern When Leaving Scene of Crime.

MONTREAL, April 30.—Struck on the head with an iron bar in the hands of a man he was driving in his automobile in the east end of the city on Saturday night, J. A. Bartlett, 40, a chauffeur for a local taxicab company, suffered a fractured skull, from which he died in the General Hospital Sunday night. His murderer, after the assault, walked calmly away in full sight of several persons. He has not yet been arrested. Witnesses state that he was a man of about 23 years of age, stout, and wearing a dark overcoat and a hard hat.

After being struck, the chauffeur collapsed and the car drove into the wall of a house, bringing out its tenants, who, saw the occupant of the car calmly take his umbrella out of the mechanism, open it and walk away. When they looked at the chauffeur they found he had sustained a blow on the head, another on the forehead and a third on the ear, almost severing it from the skull. He was unconscious and died without recovering his faculties. The victim is married but without family.

Woman to Die on Gallows.

OTTAWA, April 30.—Emilio Picariello and Florence Lassandra will pay the death penalty on May 2 for the shooting of Constable Steve Lawson, at Coleman, Alta. After reviewing the case, the Governor-in-Council has declined to interfere with the sentence. The case has attracted a great deal of attention because of the strenuous fight which has been made on behalf of the condemned man and woman. Appeal from the sentence of the trial judge was taken to the Supreme Court of Alberta, and subsequently a reprieve was granted in order that an appeal might be made to the Supreme Court of Canada. This appeal has failed, leaving the decision to the Governor-in-Council.

Twenty-four years have passed since a woman was executed in Canada. On December 27, 1899, Emily Dale da Blake, of Brandon, Man., paid the death penalty. In March of the same year, Cordelia Viau was executed in St. Scholastique, Quebec, for the murder of her husband.

CATTLE MARKETS

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

TORONTO, April 30.—A clean-up of stable-fed cattle was started by Ontario farmers last week preparatory to getting on the land, and the result was that the market at the Union Stock Yards last week was slightly overloaded. The offering of cattle exceeded that of the previous week by close to 1,200 head, the majority of the shipments were of unusually good quality. The fact that the majority of the offering were of well-finished cattle brought about a trade that was somewhat better than anticipated. Prices were a little easier, but, except in the inferior classes, the decline did not exceed 25c a hundred.

Export shipments through the week totalled close to 600 fat cattle and 200 feeders for Great Britain, along with a shipment to France of seven loads of Holstein cows, and four loads of butcher bulls. Export cattle ranged from $7.25 to $8 a hundred, with a few at $8.25. Export steers sold in load lots for export from $7 to $7.66 a hundred. Salesmen were unable to effect a clean-up on the closing market, and several hundred head of unfinished cattle were held over. It was in the butcher classes that the offering was too heavy, and it was here that the prices were easier. Butcher steers of the best quality sold from $6.75 to $7.25 a hundred, with the bulk of the run between $6.25 and $6.75.

Bulls sold well, and exporters shipped some from $4.50 to $5.50 a hundred. Ontario farmers paid from $100 to $110 for feeding steers. Milk cows and springers were slightly higher, with good Holsteins selling from $100 to $120.

Receipts of hogs showed little change from the previous week, and opened at strong prices. In fact, buyers were paying 25c a hundred higher in spots. The big packers were quoting $11, fed and watered, or $10 a hundred under Monday's price for the balance of the week. Most of the sales at the close were made from $11.15 to $11.25 on the fed and watered basis.

The offering of sheep and lambs was a light one, and prices generally showed little change. Spring lambs sold from $13 to $15 a hundred, with spring lambs being steady. Ewes moved between $4 and $6.50 a hundred.

Live stock receipts at the Union Stock Yards last night for to-day's market were: cars, 224; cattle, 3,509; calves, 403; hogs, 3,477; sheep, 1,187.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

CHICAGO, April 30.—Cattle receipts 500; compared with week ago, best steers about steady; better grades closed strong; yearlings ruled fairly active, mostly 25c to 40c lower; extreme top matured steers, $10.40; best yearlings, $10.15; best heifers, largely 25c lower; other she-stock uneven, closing steady; bulls 25c higher; veal calves, largely steady; bulk desirable vealers for packers, $8 to $8.50; few outsiders, $9.50 to $10.50.

Sheep receipts 100; compared with week ago, lambs mostly 40c to 50c higher; aged stock largely 25c to 50c higher; yearlings and wooled up one week's extreme top old crop lambs $15; bulk, $14.25 to $15; clipped lambs, largely $11 to $12, with choice Wisconsin fed description up to $12.60; to packers, quotable $12 to $12.25; native genuine spring lambs, $15 to $17.50; Navajo yearlings in the wool, $12.50 to $13, clipped, $10.

Hog receipts 4,000; 10c to 15c higher; bulk of sales, $8.30 to $8.40; top, $8.45; heavyweight, $7.30 to $8.30; medium, $7.30 to $8.30; light, $7.85 to $8.35; light light, $7.85 to $8.15; heavy packing smooth, $6.65 to $7; packing sows, rough, $6 to $6.50; killing pigs, $6.25 to $7.50.

BRITISH HONOR ALLIES.

Prince of Wales Unveils War Monument in Brussels.

BRUSSELS, April 30.—Anglo-Belgian wartime associations were vividly recalled on the occasion Saturday of the Prince of Wales unveiling, in front of the Palais de Justice, the monument which was erected by the British people in honor of Belgium's effort in the war. The population lacked nothing in enthusiasm. Dense cheering crowds lined the streets, which were ablaze with bunting and Belgian and British flags.

The climax of the excitement came when the Prince of Wales, accompanied by King Albert, arrived at the Palais, which was resplendent with uniforms and flags. Above the stir attending the ceremony could be heard the droning of aeroplanes in a cloudless sky.

Crowds thronged inward as the Prince of Wales pulled a cord releasing the intertwined British and Belgian colors, revealing the magnificent monument. The massed bands played the National Anthem while the Prince of Wales stood at salute, after which, in a short address, he presented the memorial to King Albert as a symbol of British gratitude for Belgian assistance in the war.

King Albert, in reply, spoke of the indelible memories of the war, cementing the friendship of the two countries. Especially he referred to the British soldiers as "incarnate," and turned the Ypres salient into an unshakable bastion of the allied lines and illustrated the heroism of their race."

THAT WOOD PILE

There ain't no poor in Napanee,
Hard times have come and gone,
The ones that lacked a little
Wealth
Have died for want of wood.

Let's sell them wood, and "do"
them good.
Said a few men of renown;
For we can palm off anything
To the simple folks round town.

We find it cheaper yet to burn
Our carpets and our chairs
It finds a job for some poor soul,
And our fuel is less than their's.

So Councilmen of Napanee,
If your reasonings none too good,
Just get your heads together
Then we'll have lots of "wood."

DEAR PEOPLE :—

How's your winter's coal hanging out? Ours is out altogether, but we are not buying much of this charity wood. Oh, no, we have faith, and hope yet to be spared enough sense to know a good thing when we see it. We try to buy economically, and at the same time do the fair thing. Our saviour said, "Go Feed the Flocks," so you'll pardon us for referring to the word (feed); feed it means (not fleece). Now people don't be offended at our little chat; we want to keep you from getting the (blues), and remember one thing, "don't get your feet wet." We are still here and doing fine. If we can't keep your house warm we can at least make your feet happy. So when you're down town drop in and get warm by our (Hot Air System).

Holworthy Hall

He Had Been Observed.

Despite the urgent summons which the average person feels under such circumstances Hilliard was astonishingly tardy in sitting down to the receiver. For one thing he was still vibrating from his recent stress of passion; for another he knew pretty certainly what the message was going to be, and for a third, he was somewhat emotionally under the spell of the doctor's room. Hilliard had spent a hundred hours in it—pleasant hours, so that involuntarily yielding to its kindly atmosphere, and all that the atmosphere implied, he took time to survey all four walls before he took up the receiver. And after he had listened to the telegram, and ordered a copy mailed to him in care of Mr. Cullen, he took time to survey those walls again, more closely; and this was partly for their intrinsic significance, and partly because his feelings were so fresh and tender that he dreaded to return at once to the gathering which, as a whole, couldn't be expected to defer to them. His eyes fell upon the doctor's desk, wandered and suddenly focussed hard and piercingly. He went over to the desk and slowly put out his hand and lifted up a small photograph in a metal frame.

"Well, I'll be darned!" said Hilliard, just above a whisper. The turning of the doorknob roused him; he wheeled with the photograph still in his hand.

"Hello!" said Doctor Durant, cheerfully. "Get your message all right? What's that you've found? Oh, yes—Dick's picture."

Hilliard swallowed hard, and found that his voice was queerly out of control,

"It's—it's the same one—"

"Yes—it's the same as the one you brought back. I've had it there ever since he gave it to me."

He took it gently from Hilliard's hand; replaced it on the desk. "How that boy would have made good if he had lived!" said the doctor, in an undertone. "Well—they're waiting for us."

Hilliard, following him outside, encountered the two Cullens in the hall, and at sight of his florid host, he collected his wits, and resumed his part in the play.

"Oh!" he said. "I—I—that was from one—that was a telegram from the manager of the syndicate, Mr. Cullen; he said it's decided not to try to resyndicate any story, but to hold it ourselves for the long pull—everything's put off for three or four weeks anyway. I'm having a copy mailed to the house—there's some news in it I thought you might like to see."

"Good! That leaves you free, doesn't it? You'll stay on with us then? Don't say no. I insist on it!"

"No, I couldn't do that! It's awful kind of you, but—"

"You talk to him, Angela!" laughed Mr. Cullen. "You make him stay. You've got more influence over him than I have, anyhow. And don't you dare to let him get away without a promise—understand?" He passed on, and left them together.

"You walk along with me, sir!" said Angela, imperially. "And you'd better behave yourself—I'm fierce!"

At the same moment that he looked yearningly toward Carol, who up ahead by the doorway was already captive to the wily Armstrong, young Rufus Waring was glaring belligerently toward Hilliard.

The masquerader smiled in defeat, then smiled with sudden realination of the woman-child clinging to him. He squeezed her arm out of sheer affection.

"Your gallant cavalier'll cover me with horrid welts and bruises for this!" he said warningly. "Don't make him jealous, now!" They were now bringing up the rear of the procession in the hallway.

"I'll make 'em well again," said Angela. "I'm a good nurse, aren't I?"

He was convulsed by her air of conquest.

"By the old-fashioned method?" He could hardly believe that this was the girl he had taught to climb trees, and make slingshots.

"I'll—" She stopped and blushed. The others were all on the steps; these two were in the dusky vestibule. Waring was fretting impatiently outside.

"Would you?" asked Hilliard. He was overwhelmed by the sudden, and

SAVED FROM AN OPERATION

Restored to Health By Taking "Fruit-a-tives"

Made of Fruit Juices and Tonics

The most convincing proof of the true worth of "Fruit-a-tives" as a medicine for women is found in the letters written by them to "Fruit-a-tives". For instance:

"I suffered with all the symptoms of female trouble, pains low down in the back and sides, constipation and constant headache. A doctor advised an operation. I started taking "Fruit-a-tives" and this fruit medicine completely relieved me of all my misery".

once her head came up, and he could see that her eyes were big and soft and frightened. She was hardly seventeen, and to Hilliard she had never ceased to be the child of two years ago. He bent and kissed her; her lips were trembling, expressive.

"Now we've got to hurry," he said. "Come, dear!"

It was the tone he would naturally use to a child, but he had an uneasy feeling that he had used it to a woman. Children's lips aren't expressive.

And he had another intuition—still more upsetting to him—which was body, and I do appreciate it, and I'm not ashamed of it, either."

"No," she said; "you couldn't be. You're too human." She smiled at him, and he was transported at the proof of her sympathy. "If I were in your place, I'd want to feel the same way about it."

He thanked her in his heart. He had saved both Angela and himself, and held his pristine advantage.

But there was no disputing the fact that he had made an active enemy of Waring, and an alert rival out of Armstrong. He smiled grimly as he looked at the man ahead.

"Mr. Armstrong seems to be very nervous," he said. "Not that I can blame him for wanting to be in my place. On the contrary, I'm sorry for him."

"That shows a very good disposition," she said demurely.

"Perhaps it does, and perhaps it doesn't. I believe every man owes it to himself to get what he wants. If he does, he's a success; if he doesn't—it's his own fault."

As he said this, they came abreast of the others, and Armstrong, who had heard the final sentence, whirled toward Hilliard.

"Regardless of methods?" he demanded.

"Why—to some extent," laughed Hilliard. "Why not?"

Armstrong delayed, so that the two men were a few paces behind the rest of the group. "Is that your regular creed, Mr. Hilliard?"

"My creed isn't composed of words, Mr. Armstrong, but of actions."

They had spoken so quietly that no one perceiving them would have remotely suspected that a challenge had been offered and accepted.

"Actions do speak louder, of course."

"Mine," said Hilliard, "will give you no offense. But—I generally get what I want."

"So do I. Shall we shake hands on it?" Armstrong was very affable, but tremendously in earnest.

"With pleasure. I can count on your generosity, I see."

"And on your courtesy."

"Thank you." He went complacently forward; but inwardly he was stepped in perturbation. The man was so deadly sure of himself. Could it be that he was tacitly engaged to Carol, in spite of what Angela had surmised, or so nearly on the road to an understanding with her that Hilliard was only making a fool of him self?

Armstrong laughed gently. It was like a dagger thrust in Hilliard's heart.

CHAPTER VIII.

For thirty days Hilliard had listened to the eulogies of his secret self. He had heard from a hundred sources the same belief repeated, that Dicky Morgan, given time and counsel, would have made the city as proud of him for his intrinsic worth as it now was proud of him for his military valor. This praise of Dicky Morgan had at first stunned Hilliard; after that, it had exalted him; still later, it had abased his soul. He had longed, ceaselessly, during that third period of his introspection, to take the city to heart, to reveal himself, to answer for Dicky Morgan's failures and to pledge himself anew to the achievement which Dicky Morgan's friends had prophesied; and then he had been overwhelmed by the recollection that he had made this course impossible. If he had only known that all his deceptions were needless! If he had only known that Dicky Morgan could have come home, and been forgiven! That anguish he could have saved—and what repentance! And the problem was still the same—should he continue, safe in his masquerade, to the goal he had set for himself, or should he risk the worst, and salve his conscience by renunciation?

By far the most distressing factor in this puzzle was his relationship to Carol Durant. He had seen her only half a dozen times during the month, and never alone—the fates or Armstrong had circumvented him—but he was head over heels in love with her again, and he sensed, from fugitive glances and a stray word or two on her part, that she wasn't entirely averse to him. But what would Carol think if she knew that this grey and tender stranger was hiding behind the wraith of Dicky Morgan—it was a thousand times the worse! If she were ever truly in love with Henry Hilliard, it was impossible!

And then there was little Angela Cullen—

And in addition, there was the serious business of making good; he was no longer impelled to it by resentment, but rather by unadulterated ambition; this, too, he would see destroyed by any admission of his deceit. To continue in the game was to lose his probity; to relinquish it was to lose all else; and even now, his joy and pride was contained in precisely those things which he must give up. If he decided to tear off the mask of hypocrisy, and his self-respect was rising out of the sand of what he never should have gone at all.

When he thought of his worldly ambitions, he was profoundly regretful that he had called professionally with Mr. Cullen. To be sure, the matter had come up casually and naturally, and the opening had seemed too good to be missed; at the same time, Hilliard could only help reflecting that it had been premature. It might prove, eventually, to have been just the proper course to produce results; it might be that Cullen would become so impressed that he couldn't be restrained, and would leap without looking, and leap further than he intended, and yet, ever since that preliminary interview, Hilliard had known that he had made a breach in his own fortresses; that he had rendered it possible for an informal (and logical enough) investigation to begin, or for mild suspicion to arise and gain momentum before he had devised the means of combating it. And although Hilliard believed implicitly in the goods he had to sell, he knew the difficulty of the market; he knew how timorous is the average investor; and he knew that there might very easily come a time at which his harangue would be remembered, and remembered adversely.

In this connection he was irritated by the tone of Harmon's letters to him from New York. Harmon was enthusiastic, and confident; he was relying sturdily on Hilliard to break through the acumen of the up-state capitalists; but he thought that Hilliard was making haste too slowly; he opined that all Hilliard needed to do was to force himself to a hard onslaught against Mr. Cullen, and, after that, to gather subscribers where he chose. He said that Hilliard was wasting time, and ought to begin to collect signatures. Hilliard had mentioned, in a moment of indiscretion, the assistance which Angela had unconsciously given him, and Harmon had appraised it highly; but it angered him, when he saw this reference written down in Harmon's letter, to have her name brought into the instructions, even by implication. Still . . . had he not invited this upon himself?

It was in a dizzying quandary, then, that Hilliard kept his next appointment at the Durants'. The problem had grown so many branches, sent forth so many tentacles of bewildering confusion, that he hardly knew what to say, where to turn. His one consolation was that the miracle which had been performed upon him had given him a mask of impenetrable calm. At least, he didn't have to wear his forebodings on his countenance.

And yet, almost the first words Carol said to him were: "Something's troubling you, Mr. Hilliard."

He was momentarily demoralized, and came near showing it—tried to pass it off with a laugh.

"Did I make it as plain as all that?"

"No," she said, "it wasn't plain at all."

His laugh was remarkably hollow, but he persisted in it.

"Why, how did you think of it, then?"

"Just from your eyes," she told him. "What's the matter? Anything I could help straighten out for you? Or couldn't I listen? That helps a lot, sometimes—" She dropped her eyes, and the color deepened in her cheeks.

"Isn't there anything I can do?" she said. "Or . . . . that father could? You frighten me. . . ."

"I'm sorry. . . . No, please don't think of it. I ought to be shot if I've made you unhappy."

The bitterness in his voice was acute; and by paradox, it was caused mainly by her sweet concern for him, and his realization of how little he deserved it.

"You always seem to be pushing the world away from you," she said, after a pause. "Why do you, Mr. Hilliard?"

"I didn't know that I do," he said dispiritedly. "And it would be a queer thing for me to do deliberately, when I want your friendship more than anything else I can possibly imagine—wouldn't it?"

"But a woman," said Carol slowly, "almost always has to be a confidante before she becomes a friend. . . ."

They sat without stirring while the clock ticked off a dozen seconds. Hilliard, scarcely knowing what he did—and, if he knew, indifferent—had put both hands to his forehead, as though to calm the vicious throbbing within.

Presently, and so quietly that he never heard her, Carol was gone—she had slipped across the room, to the piano.

A breath of music, light, dreamy, caressing.

And there, on the sofa where Dicky Morgan had sat, and smoked, and taken his happiness with the utmost nonchalance, sat Hilliard, in the tensest desperation of soul, strained to the tenuous melody which floated across to him, an echo of youth and gladness which mocked him, derided him, jested him. . . . a translation of Dicky Morgan's spirit, spelled up in his throat and choked him. . . . She was playing the "Liebestraum."

His shoulders went up convulsively, and he was chilled to the heart. Liebestraum! It was a taunt, a savage cynicism, a challenge to his inward self. The waves of it battered his unresisting conscience; the piercing tenderness of it undermined him, while it awoke his dormant passion, and set his will to vibrating. Liebestraum—and the dream of his love was a phantasm which his brain reeled to contemplate! The lump in his throat came near to strangling him.

It seemed to Hilliard that hours must have elapsed before he had the strength to rise, and cross the room. His brain was buffeted by wildly giddy passions; he was only partly aware that Carol, trying to rise from the bench, was wide-eyed and intuitive apprehension. Volition had gone from him; he was acting without reserve, without premeditation.

"Tell me!" he said thickly. "Have I got a chance? One in a hundred? One in a thousand? But a chance?"

"Oh! . . . . Mr. Hilliard!" Her plea was to his chivalry, and had to be.

"Tell me . . . . would I have . . . if I should share everything you—"

One hand was pressed close to her breast; the other was outstretched, defensive.

"Don't! Don't! Don't spoil what was—"

"You'll have to answer me. . . . I can't wait any longer. I'm not worth your little finger and I know it. . . . but I want a chance . . . . just a fighting chance . . . . you've got to answer me, Carol!"

She was trembling within reach of him, but it never occurred to him to touch her, and if it had, he would have refrained, out of sheer consciousness of his lack of right. His face, working strangely, awed her.

"Yes," she said, hardly above a whisper. "There's . . . one chance in a thousand. There's . . . . that much, anyway."

His arms went out to her—stayed—dropped. He stepped backward, out of the danger zone.

"Then I'll take it," he said.

* * * * * *

She had given him a chance, on an implied condition which he could never meet. She had given him a chance—and what in the name of heaven could he do with it?

CHAPTER IX.

From the marbled dignity of the Trust and Deposit company, where he had bought a New York draft for fifteen thousand dollars, and smaller ones for ten and seven, Hilliard emerged presently to South Warren street, and stood there on the sidewalk for a moment, numbed by the first galvanizing consciousness of success.

He had come back resolved to win, in his second trial, the position he had failed to appropriate in his first; he had set himself a commercial standard, and, gauged by it, he was advancing rapidly, for today's trio of subscriptions added to Mr. Cullen's check of yesterday (and Mr. Cullen had acted as though he had gained a personal victory in persuading Hilliard to accept it), made up a glittering total. A tremendous total: already Hilliard's earned commissions formed a sum to gloat about. Despised as a salesman, he had sold to four impartial business men the commodity hardest in all the world to sell, and earned for his behavior, he had made his sales on the basis of a character which hadn't been questioned since the day of his arrival. His mind and his muscles demanded action; to relieve the pressure of it, he must set off vigorously, swinging exultant.

On impulse, he crossed the street for the purpose of patronizing a florist's, where, ignoring the conventional measure of the even dozen, he ordered a splendid mass of American Beauties for Carol Durant. This done, and feeling very rich and independent, he rounded the righthand corner, and got himself greeted by two citizens of standing, of importance who, in building, displayed a deference not ordinarily granted to the average resident of Hilliard's age. Would Hilliard condescend to speak at the next meeting and dinner of the Chamber of Commerce? Would he martinet Hilliard would. And this indication of his new-won status fired him afresh.

Logically enough, his swirling thoughts followed a well-worn trail which led him straight to Carol; and for the first moment in time he tried to set a future date, depending on the outcome of his mission here, at which he could confess, and ask forgiveness for his mummery, and simultaneously ask credit for his regeneration.

At this juncture, he was aware that some one had arrested him. It was Angela's youthful suitor.

"Oh—hello, Waring!" said Hilliard cheerfully. "How's crime?"

The student of law flushed at the lively salutation, which appealed to him as a reflection upon the majesty of the bar. Also, his sense of humor was temporarily atrophied.

"We don't handle criminal cases," he responded shortly. "Say, when can you and I have a conference together, Mr. Hilliard?"

"Why, the sooner the quicker," laughed Hilliard. "What's it about?"

Waring coughed. "Business."

"The time to talk about business is all the time—isn't it?"

Waring hesitated and finally stepped into the shelter of a doorway, drawing Hilliard with him.

"I don't suppose it'll seem like a very important thing to you," he said, rather swkwardly, "but it's important enough to me, Mr. Hilliard, to be worth taking time over—to be perfectly frank with you, I've got five hundred dollars I want to put in some high-class, gilt-edged speculation. Mr. Cullen gave me some pointers, and now I'm interested in your copper mine—and this is where the hitch comes in—I've sort of got into the swing of the law, you know, and that makes men—well, what you might call judgmatical. You get so you want to look at everything from all four sides. And I thought maybe because of the—the attending circumstances—you'd be kind enough to explain the whole thing to me. Would you?"

Hilliard, who didn't knew whether to be touched or amused, compromised by nodding gravely.

"There's one thing I'll have to tell you, though," he said; "I don't advise any one to gamble in copper mines, or anything else, Waring, unless that person could actually afford to lose his whole investment, and not be hurt. In this particular case, nothing can happen to control the situation. I won't permit it. Does that hit you, or doesn't it?"

The young man's mouth opened in amusement. He had been priming himself to be a clever investigator, and to pick yawning flaws in Hilliard's underwriting, and here his thunder was stolen before he had had a chance to stake the aegis of his cleverness.

"Why—it isn't a gamble, is it? I understood—Mr. Cullen said—"

"It's safer to figure it as a gamble, Waring. It's safe to figure all these things that way. Of course, we think it's a wonderful prospect, and a practically positive success, but I don't mind telling you that so far I haven't allowed a man who couldn't afford to lose his whole subscription—and didn't understand very clearly that he might—to come in for so much as a plugged nickel. And that would apply to you, too."

The law student gasped, incredulous.

"You don't mean to say it isn't a sure thing?"

"Is any speculation? You see I'm not working very hard to take your five hundred away from you, Waring."

The boy scowled.

"I suppose it's really too small for you to bother with. Is that what you're driving at?"

Hilliard smiled cordially.

"It is, and it isn't. From any one I didn't know, I'd rather not touch it. It isn't a good plan, ordinarily, to have a lot of small stockholders. But from you—and if it isn't more than you ought to risk—"

Waring snatched at the straw.

"Well, seeing you're who you are, and I'm who I am, would you be willing to give me just as much information as you would if I had twenty times as much to put in?"

"Come up to the room," said Hilliard impulsively; and he was actuated solely by the obligation he felt toward all of Mr. Cullen's friends. "You come along up to the room, and I'll show you everything I've got. Will that do?"

At the last words the amateur detective had brightened.

"I can't come now very well. But maybe I could run up this evening, if that's all right for you."

"That'll be just as good. Eight o'clock? Fine." He held out his hand. Waring took it limply.

"I'm afraid I'm causing you a lot of bother," he said, "but it's a pretty big thing for me. . . . I hope you don't think it's anything personal . . . I mean my not just taking it for granted—"

"Not at all. Business is business. I'll expect you at eight, then." Hilliard nodded good-humoredly and went on north. A quaint intuition overcame him, and he glanced back over his shoulder. Fifty yards away the law-student was also glancing over his shoulder, and Waring, having less of self-possession than the adventurer, blushed and jerked his head to the front; Hilliard chuckled and continued his stroll.

He entered the Hotel Onondaga from the east and headed across toward the news-stand. Out of a red and gold chair in the spacious lobby a gentleman rose to meet him—a gentleman who in appearance was a very fair replica of the well-known Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford, except that he was somewhat more refined and less obese. His animation was obvious, but he delayed to remove both his gray suede gloves before he offered to shake hands with Hilliard.

"Well!" said Martin Harmon, effusively, "you're looking great! Must agree with you up here, what? Didn't expect me, did you?"

"No!" Hilliard's expression was a study; he had dealt so long with Harmon at a distance that he had almost forgotten what the broker looked like. "Why didn't you wire me you were coming?"

"Didn't know it myself until pretty near train-time—spur of the moment. Well, got any business yet?"

Involuntarily, Hilliard smiled, and the smile spread wonderfully, until Harmon caught the contagion of it and beamed more royally than ever. "The man you called the 'decoy duck'—remember when you wrote that to me?—well, he quacked yesterday."

Harmon put his hand on Hilliard's shoulder; it was an accolade.

"Really? How much?"

"Thirty." For the life of him Hilliard couldn't resist a slight forward thrust of his chest.

Mr. Harmon's eyes glazed for an instant.

"Good—good! That's clever work, son! Clever and quick. But I knew you'd do it. Thirty! That's the! Anybody else?"

Hilliard laughed exultantly.

"Yes, three more—a total of sixty-two. I mailed you a draft yesterday morning; the others are in my pocket now. I've just come from the bank."

"Great work, son!" Mr. Harmon breathed rapturously. "That puts us pretty nearly where we belong. Sixty-two thousand! It's a running start for the big race! You certainly didn't get left at the post, Hilliard! Deducted your commissions yet?"

"No; I thought you'd rather do the bookkeeping in your own office and send me a check."

Harmon's approval was manifest.

"You show me the drafts and I'll write you a check this minute. Let's go sit down in the grill, and have something. This is fine work, now I want to tell you!"

"I rather thought so myself." Hilliard had led the way to the grill and commandeered a side-table. "In fact—" He lowered his voice. "In fact, as things have worked out, Mr. Harmon, I almost wish I hadn't tried to play it just this way. I mean—"

But Harmon had already grasped the point.

"Oho! Is that so? You must have made a hit. And all your old friends you were so hot up about—weren't they as peevish at you as you thought?"

THE MARKING OF LAMBS

Benefits of System Clearly and Practicaly Told.

Australian Sheep Branding Fluid Recommended — A Numbering System Suggested — About Seed Corn — Pigs Profitable When Cared For.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

The last few years the raising of sheep has been one of the most profitable branches of live stock farming, the amount of profit depending to a great extent on the success at lambing time and immediately afterwards. Difficulty is frequently experienced in giving the necessary care to individual lambs because they are not easily recognized. In a large flock many lambs look alike, and mothers frequently disown or fail to care properly for their own lambs.

Australian Sheep Branding Fluid Recommended.

In order that needy lambs may be easily recognized and their mothers found, a convenient system of marking is needed. For this purpose Australian sheep branding fluid is best. It can be obtained in different colors from firms who handle sheep supplies, such as the Canadian Co-operative Wool Growers. This fluid does not injure the wool, and shows a distinct mark for several weeks, even when exposed to the weather. It may be applied with a small stick or, better still, an ordinary machine oiling can, and should be rubbed in so that it will not spread.

A Good System of Numbering Suggested.

In marking, a system of numbering is adopted. All male lambs are given an even number as 2, 4, 6, etc., all female lambs an odd number as 1, 3, 5, etc. The lamb's number is made on its back with fairly large figures, and the mother is also marked on the back with the same number as her lamb or lambs. If she has two lambs, a ewe number 5 and a ram number 8, she will have the figures 5 and 8 placed so that seen from behind one will be above the other or nearer the head than the other, to show 5 and 8 rather than 58. These numbers are best put on a few hours after the lambs are born.

Benefits of the System Described.

Some of the advantages of a system such as this have been found to be: One quickly gets to know the individual lambs by their numbers and their development is watched with interest; good mothers and poor mothers are known by their lambs and how they care for and feed them. This quality is often overlooked in sheep but is most important. For a ewe loosing a single lamb a needy twin can easily be found to take its place and properly guarded till fully adopted. Lambs needing help for any reason are easily found and ewes recognized that can spare a feed for them. When two or more are in charge of the flock, it is an easy matter for the one to point out to the other what lambs need attention. By the adoption of this system of marking a complete "Record of Performance" at lambing time is easy to keep, and one will be better able to cull out the undesirable ewes and their offspring, if any, leaving only those that prove good breeders and good mothers.—C. W. Laidlaw, Demonstration Farm, New Liskeard.

Famous Men at School.

It is always interesting to know where great men were educated.

Most of the present British Cabinet were at one or other of the big public schools. Five of them—Lord Salisbury, Mr. Bridgeman, Lord Curzon, the Duke of Devonshire, and Mr. Wood—are old Etonians, while four —Mr. Stanley Baldwin, Lord Peel, Mr. Amery, and Sir Robert Sanders —come from Harrow.

The Prime Minister was educated at Glasgow High School, and the Lord Chancellor at Sherman Lodors', Wellington, Winchester, Rugby, and Repton have representatives in the persons of Lord Derby, Sir Philip Lloyd-Greame, Sir Joseph Beecawen, and Sir Montague Barlow.

On the other hand, most commercial magnates received their education at more humble schools. Lord Leverhulme went to the Bolton Church Institute, while Lord Inchcape was at school at Arbroath.

In the field of literature, Mr. H. G. Wells was educated at Midhurst Grammar School. Mr. Arnold Bennett went to Newcastle Middle School. Authors who were at public schools include Mr. Compton on Mackenzie, who was at St. Paul's, and Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, who went to Stonyhurst.

First Woman Vet.

The first woman to be admitted a member of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons, Miss Aleen Cust is a sister of Sir Charles Cust, equerry to the King. Miss Cust graduated through the four-years' course at the Edinburgh Veterinary College with distinction, but the R.C.V.S. refused to admit her to its examinations.

After gaining further practical experience as an assistant in Scotland, Miss Cust went to Ireland, where she established an extensive practice, and for ten years held the post of veterinary inspector under the Galway County Council and the Department of Agriculture in Ireland.

She volunteered for service during the war, and was appointed by the War Office to a responsible position in a bacteriological laboratory attached to a veterinary hospital in France.

It has taken her eighteen years to get the R.C.V.S. diploma.

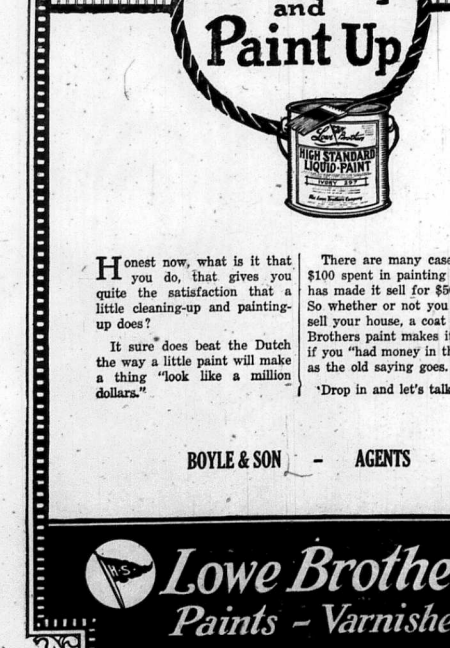
Pigs Profitable When Cared For.

Swine are profitable when given abundant sunshine and exercise, fed on well-selected feeds, gently handled, given proper sanitation and housing, kept free from worms and lice, and protected against cholera and other diseases. Quite a lot can happen a pig between birth and old age, but it is an easy animal to keep in the straight and narrow path leading to successful and profitable development if you go the right way about it.

Pigs frequently suffer more from the heat of the sun during the summer than they do from the cold of the winter period. If possible, make full use of any available shade trees when making your plans for swine pastures, feed lots or colony house locations.—L. Stevenson.

Is farm life worth while? Not if it is one continual round of drudgery, 365 days in the year, without vacation or any playtime. Nor, for that matter, is life carried on that way anywhere of much value. Conveniences, a garden, flowers, playtime, and some time given to neighbors, make life more worth while.

If farm operating equipment must be left outdoors for any length of time, it is a good idea to protect it from contact with the ground. Run it up on stones or boards.



Honest now, what is it that you do, that gives you quite the satisfaction that a little cleaning-up and painting-up does?

It sure does beat the Dutch the way a little paint will make a thing "look like a million dollars."

There are many cases where $100 spent in painting a house, has made it sell for $500 more. So whether or not you want to sell your house, a coat of Lowe Brothers paint makes it look as if you "had money in the bank" to do with as the old saying goes.

'Drop in and let's talk it over.

BOYLE & SON - AGENTS

MEN WHO CHEW COAL.

Miners of Yorkshire Possess Some Strange Habits.

Coal as a substitute for tobacco for chewing seems rather crude, but it is used by Yorkshire (England) miners. A case was reported recently in which it was stated that a man had died from over-indulgence in the habit.

A writer for London Tit-Bits had a chat with a miner about it.

"It is quite true," he said, "that men chew coal occasionally as a change from tobacco.

"A miner has to do a great deal of stooping at his work. Smoking cannot be allowed, so many a man uses tobacco in the chewing form. But chewing of tobacco has a tendency to set up 'heartburn' when a man is continually bending. A little bit of coal is a relief. We don't swallow the coal; we just chew it for a time.

"There is another reason for chewing coal. It keeps a man's mouth moist. That is a great advantage in a pit where work is uncomfortable owing to the heat. Heat is the great enemy in deep workings, and a man will do anything to make things more tolerable.

"I have never known any mischief caused by such chewing of coal—certainly I never heard before of anyone dying from it.

"In any case, every miner swallows a lot of coal dust in the course of his work. It is bound to happen. Perhaps a clean-shaven man swallows less than a man with a moustache, because a moustache, particularly a large one, catches a lot of dust. But possibly it works both ways, for a man with a moustache has more protection for his nostrils."

The talk turned to miners' superstitions.

"I have not met with many in my own experience," said the miner, "although I know they exist in certain parts. I do not think, for instance, that there is any general feeling among miners against descending thirteen in a cage.

"But two cases of what might be called miners' beliefs are pretty general in the West Riding. One is a feeling against working on Good Friday, and the other an unwillingness to continue work after a man has been killed.

"Good Friday work is regarded by the men as unlucky. They may do it, but they feel that no good can come of it. As for knocking off work for the day when a fatality occurs—that is, of course, an old custom, and the belief that it is unlucky to continue work on such a day is as strong as ever. Besides, it is a tribute to the workmate who is killed. There is a good deal of opposition to it on the part of mine-owners, but I think the men will always continue it."

Making Chocolate.

The chocolate manufacturer simply repeats on a large scale the various steps in curing, roasting, crushing and rolling as they were first learned from the Indians.

Whales.

Some whales travel twice a year more than a quarter of the circumference of the globe, being in the Arctic in summer and on the other side of the equator in the winter.

Fewer Rickshaws.

Rickshaw, the little "carts" drawn by coolies, are disappearing. Twenty-two years ago there were 300,000 in use in Japan; to-day there are less than 100,000.

TEST YOUR SEED CORN

It Is More Uncertain Than That of Cereals.

Seed Tests Will Repay Corn Growers —The Sawdust Germination Box Method — Allow Eight or Ten Days for Germination—A Use for Old Fruit Jar Rubbers.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Without good seed satisfactory crop production is impossible. Good crops of wheat, oats, and barley are grown each year without a seed test before seeding. "Why can we not get the same condition in corn?" is frequently asked. Corn is different in many ways from the cereals mentioned, and we cannot expect the high germination common to well ripened before harvest grains. Corn ripens later in the season when damp days and nights are common. The grain is attached to an open pithy cob that is frequently slower in drying out than the grain is in ripening. The corn germ contains a large percentage of oil, and the grain oils are not noted as preservatives if subjected to many changes. The germ is usually protected by coverings as is the germ in the other farm grains. The fact that wheat, oats and barley can generally be sown without a test is largely due to the ease with which the next autumn than many days of hard work in the field during the season of growth. With the seed corn planter, capable of producing strong vigorous plants, the risk is removed from the most important of all the factors involved in corn growing. Various methods of making a germination test have been devised, and different measures of success in selection obtained. The elimination that follows experience has caused a discard of many methods and centered on the usefulness and simplicity of the Sawdust Corn Germination Box.

The Sawdust Germination Box.

This method requires a minimum of attention. It is easy to prepare, and the germinating box used as a container for the sawdust can be of any convenient size, easy to handle or stack up. Boxes 20 to 30 inches and 2½ to 2½ inches with pencil a piece of cotton sheeting chop board fashion, number the seeds. Lay this sheet on the sawdust, press down and moisten. Take six grains of corn from the ears to be tested, two from near the butt, two from near the centre, and two from near the tip, and place these in each square, number the ear to correspond with the number of the square in which the six grains are placed. Using a piece of cotton of the same dimension as the box, lay it over the seed and press down gently, do not disturb the corn in the numbered spaces. Take a second cloth large enough to fold both ways or about twice the size of the box, lay this larger cloth over the box in such a way that it extends all around, cover the box area with warm, moist sawdust, putting directly on the last applied large cloth, pack the sawdust down well, by treading or stamping with a brick or heavy block of wood. This layer of sawdust should be two inches thick when firmed. Fold the extending portions of the cloth over the sawdust forming as it were a large pillow or pad.

Allow Eight or Ten Days for Results.

When this has been done, the box or boxes should be set away in a stable or room where the temperature is always above freezing and generally maintained at 60 to 70 degrees. If mice abound, cover the box with a wire screen. After eight or ten days examine the germination for results, lift off the sawdust pad and then very carefully roll back the cloth that is in direct contact with the corn. Take note of the germination of the kernels in each numbered square, and save or discard according to the merit of germination. Every ear that has given dead, mouldy or weak germinating kernels should be thrown into the feed box or only those showing great vigor and freedom from mould should be used. At the end of ten days the sprout and roots should be at least one inch long. The box, sawdust and cloth should not be used a second time without thorough scalding; this is done to destroy fungus spores that may be present. The outside two inches of space should not be used, as it may dry out and check the germination of any seed placed near the edge of the box.—L. Stevenson, Sec., Dept. of Agriculture.

Use for Old Fruit Jar Rubbers.

Old fruit jar rubbers came in handily last winter when the snow was on the ground. My boy stepped on an axe and cut a big gash in his rubber. I melted a fruit jar rubber to the consistency of wax, poured it into the gash and stuck it back in place. When it became cold the rubber was as good as new.

A man can farm any old way he likes on his own farm. But he can't get out of paying for privilege of doing things the wrong way. He pays in short crops and various losses that cut down his earnings.

The Scrubbing Brush Cure.

"Housework is an infallible cure for neurasthenic and hysterical women." That is the dictum of Dr. Goudmes laid down by him at the recent Congress of Mental Hygiene in Paris. "Let the woman with the ailing mind," he added, "do a certain amount of sweeping and scrubbing daily, and her illness will disappear." Dr. Leonard Williams, the Harley Street (London) physician, says: "There are many cases of women who have been completely cured of nervous illness by housework. Lack of occupation is the root of the matter; other forms of employment or exercise would be just as beneficial."

SUNDAY SCHOOL HOWLERS.

Some Amusing Things Said by the Little Folks.

A young teacher had undertaken a class of boys supposed to be the naughtiest in the school. His first lesson was devoted to impressing upon the scholars the fact that God could see and hear all they did and said. After he had enlarged upon this truth for some time, a small boy held up his hand.

"Please, teacher, can God see me in my grandmother's back kitchen?"

"Certainly. Why do you ask?"

"Because I know He can't."

"What do you mean?"

"Because she aint' got one!"

Collapse of the teacher; delight of the class.

The Patriarchs have suffered seriously at the hands of Sunday scholars. Not even the blameless one Moses has protected him from the criticism of these students of Scripture.

"Moses," said a bright little girl, "was a very, very, very naughty little boy. His mother beat him and beat him and beat him until she could beat him no longer. Then she put him into the ark of bulrushes!"

"My dear child," exclaimed the horrified teacher, "what makes you say that?"

Please, teacher, it says in the Bible: 'When she could no longer hide him, she took for him an ark of bulrushes.'"

A very ignorant girl attended Sunday school for the first time. The lesson was on Adam and Eve in Eden.

"And have you never heard that story before?" asked the teacher.

A gleam of intelligence lit up the child's face.

"I believe as I've heard summat about that there snake!" she confessed.

A bishop was questioning a class on the vision of Jacob at Bethel. Finally he asked if anyone would like to ask him a question. Up went a little hand.

"Please, if the angels had wings, why did they want a ladder to go up and down, sir?"

The bishop rather nonplussed, said: "Perhaps some other little child can answer that question?"

Another little girl was asked: "What do you know about Esau?"

She answered: "Esau was a mighty hunter before the Lord, and sold them for a bottle of potash!"

A little boy, when asked what struck him most in the character of Elisha Scott answered that he was exceedingly fond of animals.

"Fond of animals?" echoed the surprised teacher.

"Yes; for he sent the kept three hundred porcupines, and my mother won't let me keep one hedgehog!"

Though the following answer was given in a day school, the boy who gave it had evidently made good use of his opportunities on Sunday. The inspector asked the meaning of the word "pilgrim."

"A man who makes long journeys," replied a scholar.

"Yes, he make long journeys. Am I a pilgrim?"

"Oh, no," replied the boy; "a pilgrim is a good man!"

The Apostles' Creed, "bearing false witness," given by a child of tender years, bears the stamp of observation: "False witness is when nobody ain't done nothing, and someone goes and tells on them!"

"Tell me," said a teacher, hopefully, "what was the difference between the Sadducees and Pharisees?"

"The Sadducees," replied a bored but polite boy, "didn't believe in spirits, but the Pharisees were publicans and paid income tax!"

An energetic young curate, conducting a children's service, told the scholars that he wanted them to sing "Hold the Fort" while marching round the church in procession. He said that in order to avoid confusion he would go first; and after lining them up in ranks, he did so, singing vigorously. All went well until the second verse was reached:—

"See the mighty host advancing,
Satan leading on."

The congregation, including the children, burst into an irrepressible shout of laughter.

AMONG THE CONVICTS.

Some of Them Look Down on Their Companions.

"There is an aristocracy among the working parties of a convict prison," writes Sir Basil Thomson, K.C.B., in the London Magazine.

"At Dartmoor the cleaners and the laundrymen held their heads high, not because there was keen competition for admission to these parties, but because they turned out so well on parade. Even with the broad arrows nearly washed out of their clothes and a general air of spruce neatness as compared with other men in association. Every ear that has given dead, mouldy or weak germinating kernels should be thrown into the feed box or only those showing great vigor and freedom from mould should be used. At the end of ten days the sprout and roots should be at least one inch long. The box, sawdust and cloth should not be used a second time without thorough scalding; this is done to destroy fungus spores that may be present. The outside two inches of space should not be used, as it may dry out and check the germination of any seed placed near the edge of the box.—L. Stevenson, Sec., Dept. of Agriculture.

Delcasse Was Able Statesman

Theophile Delcasse, who died at Nice a few weeks ago, was one of the ablest statesmen France has produced under the Third Republic. His work, of which the foundations were laid twenty-five years ago, when he was Minister of Colonies, proved, when put to the test of war, the salvation of France. Delcasse, with the late King Edward, was the builder of the Entente, and without the Entente France would have probably vanished as a first-class power before the Great War. In fact, Delcasse gave France the only sane foreign policy she has had. He saw that the colonial development of France would be doubtful, and even dangerous, so long as she persisted in her old habit of regarding Britain as her enemy. He was wise enough and generous enough to see that Britain was not the grabber of the French colonie prints and, indeed, of the French Colonial Office. He believed that she was not at war with France, and he realized that a greater enemy of France was Germany. Both France and Germany were hunting for new colonies. They were more likely than come into conflict with each other than with Britain, who was merely determined to keep what colonies she had.

In two years Delcasse, in the Colonial Office, had not only mastered all the problems that confronted him, but had laid down the broad lines of future French policy. He was promoted from the Colonial Office, and then, in 1898, the Fashoda incident occurred. Under Captain Marchand a French force had marched through Equatorial Africa three years from the French sphere to the British sphere, on the Upper Nile. It was a brave performance and thrilled France as she had been thrilled for years. Marchand leaped from obscurity to a national idol, and Delcasse ordered the expedition when he was in the Colonial Office, shared in the glory. Marchand had reached the little town of Fashoda, and had hoisted the French flag, but he had not been there long when Kitchener appeared at the head of a larger British force and ordered the Frenchmen to withdraw. Delcasse realized that he had no business in a spot which was well within the British sphere, and he ordered the withdrawal without instructions from Paris, and Kitchener did not force the issue.

A furious dispute broke out in the Jingo press of England and France. Both Governments remained firm, and it seemed that a war might be precipitated. But Delcasse knew that France was not in a position to fight Britain. Perhaps he had come to the conclusion that Marchand was really a poacher. In any event, he gave the order for Marchand to quit Fashoda. For a moment it seemed as though he might be disowned by the rest of the Government, but he weathered the storm. The Fashoda incident really cleared the way for a new understanding between Britain and France. There were at the time several matters of difference between the two countries, but Delcasse, with his grasp of both countries set to work to remove all possible sources of future trouble. By the time these matters were straightened out, Britain acting generously in recognition of Delcasse's attitude on Fashoda, and it was not long before the French people began to recognize that in Delcasse they had a great Minister. He remained in office for seven years. Delcasse sought friends for France everywhere, but particularly sought to make a friend of Britain, and he succeeded with Spain, Italy and also the United States. He strengthened relations with Russia, but the Japanese War made Russia a useless ally for some years, and it was on this account that the kaiser thought the time had arrived for humiliating France, and testing the strength of the entente with Britain. While on one of his periodic cruises in the Mediterranean Wilhelm landed at Tangier and made a flamboyant speech in which he asserted his intention of supporting the sultan and maintaining the integrity of Morocco. His speech was wantonly provocative of France since France had claimed and exercised special rights in Morocco. Germany, however, insisted that she also had interests in Morocco, and demanded the summoning of a European conference to settle the matter. Delcasse refused. Then, after a series of cabinet meetings, the French Premier Rouvier said that even with Britain's assistance France was in no condition for a war in view of the unpreparedness of the army, he had to yield. Germany virtually demanded that Delcasse be dismissed, and he was.

It seems probable that if Rouvier had remained firm, Germany would have backed down. Delcasse was humiliated personally, but Germany's triumph was short lived. At the Algeciras conference Germany and Austria proved no match for Britain and France, and the situation remained where it had been before the kaiser's warlike speech. Nevertheless, in 1911, Germany made another effort to intervene in Morocco by sending the Panther to Agadir. Britain and France stood firm, and Germany sought to separate the Allies, she had to recognize all France's claim in Morocco, and had to be content with receiving a large but useless slice of French colonial territory. Thus was Delcasse vindicated. He did not return to public life again until 1915, when he was called to the Foreign Office. It is said that his return was a failure, for he was blamed for having permitted Bulgaria to throw in her lot with the Central Powers, it having been his duty to either win Bulgaria over or keep her neutral. So Delcasse fell once more and remained in retirement until his death.

Seeking Trade-Routes.

For the purpose of proving to their own satisfaction whether or not conditions of navigation to and from Hudson Bay are such that the Hudson Bay route can be made a commercial success, a number of western interests have combined and chartered the steamship Pretorian from the Canadian Pacific Ocean Services. The vessel will sail August 1 for Hudson Bay and will proceed to Fort Churchill. Approximately 300 passengers from Western Canada will make the trip.

NUTRITION IS IMPORTANT.

Novel Food Experiments Were Made With Animals.

Important facts, likely to be of considerable economic value, have been established at the Rowett Institute, Aberdeen, as a result of scientific and metabolic research into problems connected with animal nutrition.

The institute, named after that generous donor to its funds, Mr. J. Quilter Rowett, has issued its first report on its work, which aims at developing on the most economical methods of stock-feeding and the reduction of the loss of animal life due to disease.

The report states that, as the greater part of the ill-health of human beings is due directly or indirectly to nutritional disorders, by a fuller knowledge of nutrition many disorders could be cured or prevented. The fundamental principles of the life science in relation to the

GO-TO-SUNDAY-SCHOOL DAY MAY 20TH THIS YEAR

For several years a Spring Rally Day, called "Go-to-Sunday-School Day," has been observed in several of the Provinces. It has now become an established National event, and will be observed throughout the whole Dominion on May 20th. The week preceeding will be observed in Ontario as Children's Week, another important event belonging principally to the Children's Division of the Sunday School. In view of the importance attached to the Sunday School today, both of these events will create a wide public interest, and should be taken up by every Sunday School in the County.

The special programme for Go-to-Sunday-School Day this year is entitled "Building the Nation" and is prepared for use at the Worship Period of the regular School session, provision being made for an offering to be taken for the work of the Ontario Religious Education Council.

There is a place in the Sunday School to-day for every member of every family, and it is for the purpose of bringing more people to Sunday School that these important events are being carried out.

DU-KO

for Pies and Puddings

SAVES TIME-LABOR-MONEY

RECIPE FOR PIE OR PUDDING

¼ contents of a can of DU-KO; 2 cups of milk (water for Lemon) Pour enough milk into powder to make a batter; heat the balance; when it boils, pour in the batter. Stir until it thickens, then pour into pie shell, previously baked, or into a mould if a pudding is desired.

Three flavors: Lemon, Maple Cream and Chocolate.

BECAUSE—It only takes 5 minutes to prepare.

BECAUSE—DU-KO only needs the addition of milk or water.

BECAUSE—DU-KO needs no eggs, sugar or extra flavoring to "improve" it.

The "Cheapest" is not always best. Compare the results you get from DU-KO with the price you pay for it. Figure the saving you make in cost of extra materials, time expended and work invovled. You will find DU-KO is a real economy. Satisfaction guaranteed or money will be refunded.
